PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION.

IN preparing the present edition I had the unique assistance of the notes of Sir Lawrence Jenkins the eminent and illustrious lawyer who filled the office of Chief Justice of the High Court of Bombay with great ability and distinction for well nigh ten years. The notes above referred to were prepared by Sir Lawrence Jenkins while he was on the Special Committee which met at Simla in June 1907 and modelled the Code of Civil Procedure in its present form. That the Code of 1908 is a considerable improvement upon its predecessor is beyond all question. The arrangement though novel is scientific. It proceeds upon the lines of the Judicature Acts and the Rules framed under those Acts. It consists of two parts—the first containing provisions of a substantive character and the second containing provisions which relate to “matters of mere machinery.” The 178 sections which form the body of the Code constitute the first part. The Rules and Orders comprised in Schedule I constitute the second part. The provisions of the Code of 1882 relating to arbitration have been transferred to a separate schedule, being Schedule II the object being to facilitate the repeal of these provisions on the passing of a new and comprehensive Arbitration Act. Sections 321 to 325 C of the same Code, which relate to execution of decrees by Collectors have been transferred to Schedule III. Schedule IV contains a list of enactments amended and Schedule V a list of enactments repealed by the new Code.

The arrangement of the present work is a simple one. Long familiarity with the section numbers of the Code of 1882 has rendered it necessary to give a comparative table of the sections of the old and the new Code. Such a table has accordingly been given, and to facilitate reference to it, which is likely to be constant, the table portion has been marked off by a piece of tape attached to the volume. At the same time we have given at the beginning of each section and rule of the new Code references to the corresponding sections of the Code of 1882 in thick black types enclosed in square brackets. There are, besides, a large number of rules comprised in the First Schedule which have been borrowed from the Rules made under the Judicature Acts. References to the latter rules also have been given in square brackets at the beginning of the corresponding rules of this Code, and are indicated by the letters “R S C,” being an abbreviation of the words “Rules of the Supreme Court of England” see, for instance, Order 1, rule 1, at p. 301

There have been numerous alterations and additions introduced into the new Code, of which the following require the immediate attention of practitioners.—

- 1 S 2, cl 2,—definition of decree
- 2 S 2, cl 11,—definition of legal representative

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE

ACT V OF 1908

RECEIVED THE ASSENT OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL
ON THE 21ST MARCH 1908

An Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the Procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature, It is hereby enacted as follows —

Preliminary.

Short title, commencement and extent

1. [S 1] (1) This Act may be cited as the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908

(2) It shall come into force on the first day of January, 1909

(3) This section and sections 155 to 158 extend to the whole of British India the rest of the Code extends to the whole of British India, except the Scheduled Districts

Interpretation of the Act —The first Code of Civil Procedure was passed in the year 1859 and it was repealed by the Code of 1877. The Code of 1877 was repealed by the Code of 1880 which in its turn has been repealed by the present Code. It will be seen from the Preamble that the present Act not only defines and amends but also consolidates the law of civil procedure. The object of consolidation is to collect the statutory law bearing upon a particular subject and to bring it up to date, in order that it may form a useful code applicable to the circumstances existing at the time when the consolidation Act is passed. When a question therefore arises as to the construction of a section in such an Act the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the Act and to ask what is its natural meaning. If the meaning is plain it is not proper to have recourse to the previous state of the law and the language of the Act must be interpreted uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law. But if the meaning be doubtful, resort may be had to the previous

The object of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which the Legislature is passing an Act are to be excluded from construction of the Act (b) These proceedings include Statements of Objects and Reasons attached to Bills, Marginal notes to the sections of an Act are not to be referred to for the purpose of construction of the Act (c)

The object of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which the Legislature is passing an Act and it is not the province of a judge to disregard or go outside the enactment according to its true construction (f) In cases however where provisions in the Code the Court has the power and it would seem according to justice equity and good conscience (g) See s 151 which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under previous law are not to be intended not to have a retrospective operation unless it is clearly expressed that such intention is manifested (h) The provisions of the Code shall not apply to enactments affecting procedure or practice such as the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 The reason is that no person has a vested right in any particular principle indeed seems to be that alterations in the law are not intended to be retrospective unless it is clearly expressed that such intention is manifested (h) The nature of a vested right and hence the provisions of the Code shall not affect any present right of any party at its commencement See also s 152 which is termed the body of the Code and (1) fundamental and is unalterable except by the Legislature and its details and machinery and can be more or less altered by the Legislature (2) the body of the Code creates jurisdiction on which it is to be exercised It follows that the provisions of the Code shall not be read in conjunction with the provisions of the Code (i)

India is not defined in the Code of Procedure in an Act we are to turn to the Act of 1897 There are several terms of

See notes to O 25, § (1), "British India."

Scheduled Districts—A list of Scheduled Districts is given in Schedule I to the Schedule Districts Act XIV of 1874. The sections of this Code except s 1 and ss 15a to 15s, do not extend to any of the Scheduled Districts. Section 5, however, of the Scheduled Districts Act empowers the Local Government, with the sanction of the Governor General in Council, to extend to any of the Scheduled Districts any enactments in force in British India and the whole of the Procedure Code has accordingly been extended to several Scheduled Districts including Sindh Ajmere Merwara and the Scheduled Districts of the Punjab (n).

Definitions

(1) "Code" includes rules

See notes on p. 2 para No (6)

(2) "decree" means the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final. It shall be deemed to include the rejection of a plaint and the determination of any question within section 47 or section 144, but shall not include—

(a) any adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order, or

(b) any order of dismissal for default

Explanation.—A decree is preliminary when further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of. It is final when such adjudication completely disposes of the suit. It may be partly preliminary and partly final:

(3) "decree-holder" means any person in whose favour a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made.

Definition of "decree" in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882—The term "decree" was defined in the Code of 1882 as follows—

"'Decree' means the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed or defence set up in a Civil Court, when such adjudication, so far as regards the Court expressing it, decides the suit or appeal. An order rejecting a plaint or directing accounts to be taken or determining any question mentioned or referred to in section 244 [now s. 47] but not specified in section 588 [now s. 104 and O 43, r. 1] is within this definition, an order specified in section 588 is not within this definition."

Importance of the definition of decree—The adjudications of a Court of law may be divided into two classes, namely, (1) decrees, and (2) orders. Orders again may be sub-divided into appealable orders and non appealable orders. The expression order is defined in cl (14) of the present section as meaning "the formal expression of any decision of a Civil Court which is not a decree."

Where a decision amounts to a decree, it is invariably appealable unless it is expressly provided that no appeal shall lie from it (s. 96). Further, where an appeal is preferred from a decision which amounts to a decree and a decree is passed in appeal, an appeal will lie to the High Court from the decree passed in appeal if the case comes within the provisions of s. 100 below. This is called a second appeal. In the case, therefore, of an adjudication which amounts to a decree the law permits an appeal and in some cases also a second appeal.

Where an adjudication amounts to an order, no appeal lies from it unless it is enumerated in the list of appealable orders given in s. 104 or in the list given in O 43, r. 1.

 in the case of an adjudication which amounts to a decree the law permits a second appeal in some cases no second appeal is allowed at all in the case of an adjudication which amounts to an appealable order. That is to say, if an appeal is preferred from a decree and a decree is passed in appeal an appeal will in certain cases lie from the decree passed in appeal. But if an appeal is preferred from an appealable order and an order is passed in appeal, no appeal lies at all from the order passed in appeal [s. 104 sub section (2)]. To take an instance A appeals from a decision of a subordinate Judge to a District Judge. The appellate Court decides against A. A prefers a second appeal to the High Court from the decision of the District Court. If the

The definition of decree is important not only for determining the right of second appeal but for determining whether an appeal lies at all in the first instance. If an adjudication is an appealable order, there is no difficulty whatever in determining whether an appeal lies from it. All that has to be done in such a case is to refer to s. 104 and to O 43 r. 1, and to ascertain whether the order is enumerated in the lists there given. The real difficulty in determining the right of appeal arises when the adjudication from which an appeal is preferred is not an appealable order. In such a case the adjudication may be either a decree or a non appealable order, and an appeal can lie only if the adjudication amounts to a decree. The appellant would in this class of cases endeavour to show that the adjudication appealed from is a decree, while the respondent would endeavour to show that the adjudication is merely an order. Instances of this class of cases are given in the next following paragraph.

Essential elements of a decree—The term "decree" is defined in the Code as meaning "the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit." The words italicized above indicate the distinguishing marks of a decree. To constitute a decision a decree, the following conditions must be present—

I.—The decision must have been expressed in a suit

II.—The decision must have been expressed on the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit

III.—The decision must be one which conclusively determines those rights

If all the elements set forth above concur in a decision the decision is a decree, if not, it is an order see definition of 'order', cl 14 below.

Illustrations of Condition I

1 A applies for leave to sue in forma pauperis. The application is rejected on a finding that A is not a pauper. This decision is not a decree for it is not a decision in a suit (o). [The application is for leave to sue, which shows clearly that there is yet no suit. Every suit is commenced by a plaint (p) and an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis does not become a plaint until the application is granted (see O 33 r 8).] Similarly an order under s 18 of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 granting or refusing leave to institute a suit for accounts of a religious endowment is not a decree and is not therefore appealable (g).

2 There are several Acts relating to special subjects under which proceedings have to be commenced by a petition and not by a suit. Decisions on petitions under those Acts would not therefore, be decrees. Thus a decision on a petition under the Religious Endowments Act appointing a new member to fill a vacancy in a committee of trustees of an endowment is not a decree (r).

Illustrations of Condition II

1 In a suit by A against B an application is made by X to be added as a plaintiff to the suit on the ground that he is interested in the subject matter of the suit. The application is rejected. The decision is not a decree, for it is not a decision on any right which X might have claimed in the suit had he been made a party plaintiff (s).

2 A plaintiff in a suit, finding that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, applies for leave to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit (O 23 r 1). The leave is granted. This decision is not a decree for it is not an adjudication determining the rights of the parties with regard to any matter in controversy in the suit. These rights still remain open for determination in a subsequent suit (t).

Note—In all the cases cited above there was an appeal preferred from the decision. The decision not being an appealable order in any of them, it was contended on behalf of the appellant that it amounted to a decree, and was therefore appealable. But it was held in all of them that the adjudication did not amount to a decree and that it was not therefore appealable.

Points of distinction between the definition of "decree" in this Code and that in the Code of 1882—The definition of decree as it stood in the Code of 1882 has been modified in the following two respects —

1 Under the Code of 1882, no adjudication came within the definition of a decree unless it decided the suit. Under this Code, an adjudication which conclusively (u) determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit is a decree, though it does not completely dispose of the suit. But the decree in that case is called a preliminary decree as distinguished from a final decree. The present definition is wider than that in the Code of 1882 in that it includes preliminary decrees within its scope, the object being to permit an appeal from preliminary decrees. See notes below "Preliminary decree".

2 Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether an order of dismissal for default was a decree. The present section expressly declares that an order of dismissal for default is not within the definition of decree, the object being to exclude the right of appeal from such order. See notes below "Order of dismissal for default".

Two other alterations both of a minor character may also be noted here. They are as follows —

(i) An adjudication directing accounts to be taken is no longer to be deemed to be a decree as under the Code of 1882. It is a decree by the very terms of the present definition though a preliminary one. Under the Code of 1882 such an adjudication was appealable for it was to be deemed to be a decree. Under this Code it is appealable for it is a decree. This distinction, however, is of no practical importance. See notes to s. 97 below.

(ii) The word 'within' has been substituted for 'mentioned or referred to in' with a view to bring within the definition of decree orders against sureties (s. 145) and orders as to court fees in pauper suits (O. 33, r. 13), and thus providing for appeals therefrom. See notes to s. 145 and O. 33, r. 13.

It has been seen that the importance of the definition of decree rests on the fact that by reference to it the right of appeal is determined. Hence every material change made in the definition of that term must be taken to have been made for the purpose either of permitting an appeal from adjudications which were not appealable before or excluding a right of appeal from adjudications from which an appeal was permitted under the old law. It is from this standpoint that the new definition must be examined and that is what we have attempted to do above.

Preliminary decree—A decree may be preliminary or final or it may be partly preliminary and partly final. A decree is preliminary when the adjudication, though it conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to some or one of the matters in controversy in the suit does not completely dispose of the suit and further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of. It is final when such adjudication completely disposes of the suit (v). As to appeals from decrees, see ss. 96 and 97.

The question whether a decision amounts to a preliminary decree is one of considerable importance in view of the provisions of s. 97, by which it is provided that if a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree does not appeal therefrom within the period of limitation allowed for appeals, he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in an appeal from the final decree. It was held at one time by the High Court of Bombay that a finding on a preliminary issue that a suit is not barred for misjoinder, or that it is not barred by limitation, or a decision that the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit was a preliminary decree (w). But these decisions have since been overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court (x). In the last mentioned case it was held that a finding that the matters in dispute are not caste questions and are not therefore outside the jurisdiction of Civil Courts does not amount to a preliminary decree from which an appeal can lie (x). Similarly it has been held that a finding that a matter is not res judicata and that therefore the trial can proceed is not a preliminary decree (y). Nor is a finding that the plaintiff is competent to maintain the suit brought by him (z). Nor is a finding that a suit is not barred by limitation (a). A finding that the defendant is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Dekhan Agriculturists Relief Act 1879 is not by itself an adjudication which can be embodied in a preliminary decree though it may result in the plaint being returned for presentation to the proper Court (b) [see O 7 r 10]. An interlocutory order that a plaint should be stamped with a higher court fee than what it is stamped with does not amount to a preliminary decree (c). None of these findings determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit it merely enables the Court to proceed to inquire into those rights (d).

1 A sues B for cancellation of a document and a decree is passed in the suit. This is a final decree for the suit is completely disposed of.

2 A suit is brought by one partner against another for a dissolution of partnership and for the taking of partnership accounts. Here the Court may pass a preliminary decree declaring the proportionate shares of the parties and directing such accounts to be taken as it thinks fit and after the accounts are taken it may pass a final decree directing payment of debts due by the partnership and the costs of the suit and directing payment to the parties of the amount found due to them on the taking of accounts. See O 20 r 15.

3 A sues B for the recovery of possession of certain immovable property and for mesne profits. The Court may pass a decree for possession of the property and direct inquiry as to mesne profits. Here the decree is partly final and partly preliminary. It is final so far as it directs delivery of possession to A. It is preliminary so far as it directs an inquiry as to mesne profits. After the inquiry is completed the Court has to pass a final decree in respect of mesne profits in accordance with the result of the inquiry. See O 20 r 1^o.

The above list is not exhaustive, and there is nothing to preclude the Courts from passing a preliminary decree in other cases (c)

Rejection of plaint—As to an adjudication rejecting a plaint it has been expressly provided by the present clause that it shall be deemed to be a decree. Such adjudication, therefore, is appealable as a decree. In appeal, however, is not the only remedy open to a party whose plaint is rejected for he may cure the defect for which the plaint was rejected and present a fresh plaint (O 7 r 13). As to the cases in which a plaint shall be rejected see O 7, r II

Order returning plaint—A plaint may be returned for amendment (O 6, r 17) or to be presented to the proper Court (O 7 r 10). In either case the decision returning the plaint is an order as distinguished from a decree. An order returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court was appealable under the Code of 1882 [s 588, cl (6),] and it is also appealable under this Code (O 43 r 1 cl (a)). An order returning a plaint for amendment was appealable under the Code of 1882 [s 588, cl (6)], it is no longer appealable under this Code (f)

Rejection of memorandum of appeal—It is provided by the present section that a decision rejecting a plaint is to be deemed to be a decree. The provisions of this and other sections relating to suits apply to appeals so far as such provisions are applicable (s 108). Hence a decision rejecting a memorandum of appeal on the ground that it is barred by limitation (g) or that it is insufficiently stamped (h) or that it was not duly presented (i) is appealable as a decree.

Order returning memorandum of appeal—No appeal lies from an order returning a memorandum of appeal to be presented to the proper Court (j). Nor does an appeal lie from an order returning a memorandum of appeal for amendment.

Adjudications appealable as orders—In adjudication which is appealable as an order is not a decree. See s 104 and O 43 r 1.

Order of dismissal for default—It is provided by O 8 r 8 that where the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed. Such an order it is enacted by the present section is not within the definition of decree and is not therefore appealable. Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the decision of a Court under the corresponding section 102 dismissing a suit for default was a decree or merely an order. It was held by the High Court of Madras that the decision was an order and not a decree and that there was no first or second appeal therefrom (k). On the other hand it was held by the other High Courts that the decision was a decree and appealable as such (l).

Again it is provided by O 41, r 17, that where on the day fixed the appellant does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed. Such an order it is enacted by the present section is not within the definition of decree, and is not therefore appealable. Under the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta that a decision under the corresponding section 55b dismissing an appeal for default was a decree and was therefore appealable (m) In an Allahabad case it was assumed that the decision was not a decree (n)

Further it is provided by O 41 r 11 (2) that if on the day fixed for the hearing of the appeal the appellant does not appear the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed. Such an order it is enacted by the present section is not within the definition of decree and is not therefore appealable. Under the Code of 1882 it was held by the Calcutta High Court that a decision under the corresponding s 501 dismissing an appeal for default was a decree and was therefore appealable (o)

Lastly we may refer to the provisions of O 9 r 3 by which it is provided that when neither party appears when the suit is called on for hearing the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed. Such order it is enacted by the present section is not within the definition of decree and is not therefore appealable

Decree-holder—A decree for specific performance of an agreement for the sale of immovable property may be executed either by the plaintiff or the defendant either party being a decree holder in such a case (p)

(4) "district" means the local limits of the jurisdiction of a principal Civil Court of Original jurisdiction (hereinafter called a 'District Court'), and includes the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of a High Court

(5) "foreign Court" means a Court situate beyond the limits of British India which has no authority in British India and is not established or continued by the Governor General in Council

Foreign Court—The Privy Council is not within this definition for though it is situate beyond the limits of British India it is invested with judicial authority within it (q) But the High Court of Justice in England whether it be the Chancery Division (r) or the King's Bench Division (s) is a foreign Court. The Ceylon Court also is a foreign Court (t) As to suits on judgments of the High Court of Justice in England see notes to s 13. A British Indian Court will not give effect to a foreign judgment etc

(6) "foreign judgment" means the judgment of a foreign Court

(7) "Government Pleader" includes any officer appointed by the local Government to perform all or any of the functions expressly imposed by this Code on the Government Pleader and also any pleader acting under the directions of the Government Pleader

(8) "Judge" means the presiding officer of a Civil Court

2. (10) "judgment-debtor" means any person against whom a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made.

(11) "legal representative" means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased and where a party sues or is sued in a representative character the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued:

Legal representative—The expression "legal representative" occurs in several places in the Code. In the Code of 1882 it was differently interpreted by different High Courts. See the undermentioned case (i) in which almost all the earlier cases are reviewed. See also notes to s 50 s 52 and O 22 r 3.

'Where a party sues in a representative character'—A suit by a Hindu reversioner for a declaration that an alleged adoption is not valid is a suit by him in a "representative character, that is as representing in his reversionary right, the estate of the last male owner, and on his death such right devolves on the next reversioner so as to entitle him to be substituted as plaintiff under O 22 r 3 (w).

A surviving coparcener is not a legal representative of a deceased coparcener within the meaning of this clause (x). See notes to O 22, r 3. "Legal representative"

'Intermeddles with the estate'—One who intermeddles with the estate of a deceased person, even though it may be with part thereof, is a legal representative within the meaning of this clause and is liable to the extent of the property taken possession of by him (y).

(12) "mesne profits" of property means those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom, together with interest on such profits, but shall not include profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession.

See s 144 and notes to O 20, r 12.

(13) "moveable property" includes growing crops:

(14) "order" means the formal expression of any decision of a Civil Court which is not a decree.

See notes under cl (3) of this section.

(15) "pleader" means any person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court, and includes an advocate, a vakil and an attorney of a High Court.

(c) Dhanomai v. Falaadul Khan (1904) 8 C. W. N. 843.

See also Dhanomai v. Falaadul Khan (1904) 8 C. W. N. 843. See also Haroon v. Falaadul Khan (1904) 8 C. W. N. 843. See also Haroon v. Falaadul Khan (1904) 8 C. W. N. 843. See also Haroon v. Falaadul Khan (1904) 8 C. W. N. 843.

"Pleader"—The term "pleader" is here used in a much larger sense than its ordinary signification as a convenient term to designate all persons who are entitled to plead for others in Court. "Pleader," in its ordinary sense, is synonymous with vakil (2).

Authority to compromise—An attorney or solicitor is entitled in the exercise of his discretion to enter into a compromise on behalf of his client, if he does so in a bona fide manner (a). And so is counsel (b). But a pleader cannot enter into a compromise on behalf of his client without his client's express authority (c). The reason is that both counsel and solicitor have an implied authority to compromise, the former by reason of his retainer, and the latter by virtue of his position of agent in relation to his client (d).

The result is that the consent of the client is not needed for a matter which is within the ordinary authority of counsel, and if a compromise is entered into by counsel, it binds the client though his consent was not taken (e). But what if the authority of counsel has been expressly limited by the client, and counsel consents to an order or decree in spite of the dissent of the client, or on terms differing from those which the client authorized? In such a case if the limitation of authority is communicated to the other side consent by counsel outside the limits of his authority is of no effect (f). If the limitation is not communicated to the other side, the question arises whether, having regard to the fact that the other side entered into the compromise believing that the opponent's counsel had the ordinary unlimited authority, the Court has power to interfere. It has been recently held by the House of Lords that it has, and that it is not prevented by the agreement of counsel from setting aside or refusing to enforce the compromise, that it is a matter for the discretion of the Court, and that when, in the particular circumstances of the case, grave injustice would be done by allowing the compromise to stand the compromise may be set aside, even although the limitation of counsel's authority was unknown to the other side (g). The authority of counsel and solicitor to compromise a suit is limited to the issues in the suit. A compromise will not therefore be binding on a client if it extends to matters outside the scope of the particular case in which the counsel or solicitor is retained (h). A compromise effected out of Court is also not binding upon the client (i). And since a compromise is no more than an agreement it can be set aside at the instance of the client if it has been made by the counsel or solicitor under a misrepresentation or mistake (j). The application to have the suit restored to the list should be made before the decree is sealed (j).

Power to refer to arbitration.—The law is the same as regards reference to arbitration. Counsel has an implied power to consent to a reference and so has a solicitor on the record (k). But the authority does not extend to referring the case to arbitration on terms different from those which the client has authorized (l). A pleader or vakil has no power to refer a case without the express authority of his client (m).

Authority to withdraw suit.—Counsel has an implied power to withdraw an action (n) As regards vakils or pleaders it has been held that a vakalatnama couched in general terms suffices prima facie to authorize him to apply on behalf of his client for leave to withdraw a suit, and in the absence of anything to show that the vakil had acted contrary to the client's instructions, or otherwise was guilty of misconduct in making the application the client is bound by the act of his vakil (o)

Power to bind client by admission.—Counsel (p) solicitors (q) and pleaders or vakils (r) have an implied authority to bind their clients by admissions of fact, provided such admissions are made during the actual progress of litigation and not in mere conversation (s) Thus an admission of liability by a vakil is sufficient to warrant a decree against his client in the suit (t) The result is that the client will be bound by the admission even though it may be erroneous But counsel, solicitor, or vakil cannot bind his client by an admission on a point of law Hence if the admission be erroneous the client is free to repudiate it (u) It may here be observed that the omission of a pleader or counsel to argue a question of law or his abandoning a question of law does not preclude the Court from dealing with the question (v)

Power to abandon issue—A pleader's general powers in the conduct of a suit include the power to abandon an issue which in his discretion, he thinks it inadvisable to press (w)

(16) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules

(17) "public officer" means a person falling under any of the following descriptions, namely—

(a) every Judge,

(b) every member of the Indian Civil Service,

(c) every commissioned or gazetted officer in the military or naval forces of His Majesty, including His Majesty's Indian Marine Service, while serving under the Government,

(d) every officer of a Court of Justice whose duty it is, as such officer, to investigate or report on any matter of law or fact, or to make, authenticate or keep any document, or to take charge or dispose of any property, or to execute any judicial process, or to administer any oath, or to interpret, or to preserve order, in the Court, and every person

"Any special form of procedure"—It has been held having regard to these words that where two Judges differ in an appeal from the Original side of the High Court the special procedure laid down in cl 36 of the Letters Patent should be followed and not the rule laid down in s 93 of the Code (y)

Pecuniary jurisdiction

Save in so far as is otherwise expressly provided, nothing herein contained shall operate to give any Court jurisdiction over suits the amount or value of the subject matter of which exceeds the pecuniary limits (if any) of its ordinary jurisdiction.

Pecuniary limits of jurisdiction—See notes to s 15 under the head "Court of lowest grade competent to try a suit"

Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees—The jurisdiction of a Munsif in Bengal, N W P and Assam extends to suits (not otherwise exempted from his cognizance) of which the value does not exceed Rs 1,000, and in the Madras Presidency to suits of which "the value" does not exceed Rs 2,500. It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (a), Allahabad (a), Madras (b), and Patna (c), that where a suit is properly brought in the Court of a Munsif for recovery of possession of land and mesne profits prior to the date of the suit, and mesne profits also from the institution of the suit which are claimed or assessed at a sum beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif, the Munsif has jurisdiction to fix such mesne profits and pass a decree for a sum beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction. The value of such a suit for the purposes of jurisdiction is the value of the immoveable property plus mesne profits up to the date of the suit. Mesne profits after the date of the suit do not form part of the cause of action on which the suit is brought. The forum of appeal also is determined by the value of the suit and not by the amount decreed. See notes to s 38, "Jurisdiction of Court executing decree," and notes to s 96, "Forum of appeal"

A suer B for possession of land valued at Rs 686 and for mesne profits up to the date of the suit valued approximately at Rs 200 and for mesne profits subsequent to the date of the suit not valued at all. The suit is brought in the Court of a Munsif whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs 1,000. A decree is passed in the suit for the plaintiff for possession and for mesne profits up to the date of the suit. Subsequently the plaintiff applies to the Munsif for assessment of mesne profits after the date of the suit claiming Rs 60,000 for such profits. According to the Calcutta, Allahabad, Madras and Patna High Courts, the Munsif can pass a decree for Rs 60,000, though the amount exceeds his pecuniary jurisdiction.

Attachment before judgment by Provincial Small Cause Court—A Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to attach moveable property before judgment. An attachment before judgment is not one of the interlocutory orders referred to in cl (b) of the section (f)

As regards immoveable property there were conflicting decisions of the Calcutta High Court on the question whether a Provincial Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to order an attachment of such property before judgment. The whole question was considered by a Full Bench of that High Court in the undermentioned case (g) and it was held by a majority that a Court of Small Causes has such jurisdiction but expressed a doubt as to the intention of the Legislature in the matter when the Code was passed in 1908. To resolve that doubt the words in italics were substituted by Act I of 1926 for the words so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders, which occurred in cl (b) of the original section after the words sections 94 and 95. [S 8.] Save as provided in sections 24, 38 to 41, 75, clauses (a), (b) and (c), 76, 77 and 155 to 158, and by the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, the provisions in the body of this Code shall not extend to any suit or proceeding in any Court of Small Causes established in the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay ,

Provided that—

- (1) the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William, Madras and Bombay, as the case may be, may from time to time, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct that any such provisions not inconsistent with the express provisions of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, and with such modifications and adaptations as may be specified in the notification, shall extend to suits or proceedings or any class of suits or proceedings in such Court
- (2) All rules heretofore made by any of the said High Courts under section 9 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, shall be deemed to have been validly made

The provisoes were inserted in the section by the Code of Civil Procedure Amendment Act I of 1914 s 2

PART I.

Suits in General

JURISDICTION OF THE COURTS AND RES JUDICATA

9 [S 11] The Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try ^{Courts to try all civil suits unless barred} all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred

Explanation—A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies

Alterations in the section—The words 'either expressly or impliedly barred' have been substituted for the words 'barred by any enactment for the time being in force' which occurred in s 11 of the Code of 1887. The latter words were held to mean expressly barred (A)

Onus—A party seeking to oust the jurisdiction of ordinary Civil Courts must establish his right to do so (i)

Suits of a civil nature—Suits may be divided into two classes—(1) those which are of a civil nature and (2) those which are not of a civil nature. It is suits only of a civil nature which a civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain. A civil Court has no jurisdiction to try suits which are not of a civil nature. A suit is not of a civil nature if the principal or only question in the suit is a caste question or a question relating to religious rites or ceremonies. But when (1) a caste question or a question relating to religious rites or ceremonies is not the principal question in the suit but is merely a subsidiary question and (2) the principal question is of a civil nature e.g. a question as to any right to property or to an office or to any other civil right and (3) the principal question which is of a civil nature cannot be determined without deciding the caste question or question relating to religious rites or ceremonies the Court has the power to decide the caste question or question relating to religious rites or ceremonies to enable it to decide the principal question (i). It is upon this principle that the Explanation to the section is based. We may therefore say that a suit is of a civil nature if the principal question in the suit relates to a civil right. The mere fact that the determination of such a question depends entirely on the decision of caste questions or questions as to religious rites or ceremonies does not take the suit out of the category of suits of a civil nature (see the Explanation to the section). We now proceed to consider the leading cases in which the Courts have refused to try suits on the ground either (1) that the principal question in the suit was a caste question or (2) that it related to religious rites or ceremonies

Suits in which the principal question is a caste question are not suits of a civil nature—A caste is any well defined native community (be it Hindu or Mahomedan) governed for certain internal purposes by its own rules and regulations (1). A caste question is one which relates to matters affecting the internal autonomy of the caste and its social relations (2).

To determine whether or not a question is a caste question, the test is—Would the cognizance of the matter in dispute by the Court be an interference with the autonomy of the caste? Would the Court be deciding the question which the caste as a self governing body is entitled to decide for itself? If yes, the question is a caste question and no civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain it (3). Thus a caste may pass a resolution depriving a member of man par invitation, an invitation to dinner, or to mung or other ceremonies, for an alleged breach of a caste rule. The excluded member has no remedy in law, for all that he has lost is a social privilege, and not a legal right, and the caste is the only tribunal to which a casteman deprived of that privilege can resort. A civil Court has no power by its decree to compel the members of a caste to invite a casteman to dinner or to any ceremony (4). Similarly a Court has no power to compel barbers belonging to a certain caste to shave a casteman or to pare his nails though the party aggrieved may allege that he would lose caste by the loss of service at the hands of the barbers (5). On the same principle a member of a caste is not entitled to any remedy in law if the other members refuse to go to his house on the occasion of a death in his family and a visit him in the removal of the dead body, though they may in doing so break a rule of the caste. It is not for a Court of law to enforce a caste rule or resolution. It is for the caste itself that makes the rule or passes the resolution to do so (6). Hence a Court will not compel a defaulting member to pay to the caste a sum of money which by a resolution of the caste every casteman is liable to pay on the occasion of a marriage in his family (7).

Expulsion from caste—To exclude a member of a caste from invitation to caste dinners or ceremonies is as stated above to deprive him of a social privilege. But to expel him from the caste is to deprive him of a legal right which forms part of his status. Hence a suit will lie for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to be re-admitted into the caste and also for damages for expulsion from the caste (8). But to entitle the plaintiff to a decree, it must be shown that his excommunication was wrongful and the Court will in such cases enquire into the validity of the sentence of excommunication. Excommunication is wrongful, if a member is expelled from the caste without opportunity of explanation being offered to him (9). It is also wrongful if a member is expelled for an alleged breach of a caste rule which, as a matter of fact, he has not broken (10). In the mufassal of Bombay, however, a suit does not lie for restoration to caste, the cognizance of such a suit being expressly barred by Bombay Regulation II of 1827 s. 21 (11). But a suit is maintainable for "damages" on account of an alleged injury to the caste and character of the plaintiff arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party.

Suits in which the principal question relates to religious rites or ceremonies are not suits of a civil nature—Thus a suit will not lie to establish

Suits in General

JURISDICTION OF THE COURTS AND RES JUDICATA

9 [S 11] The Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred

Courts to try all civil suits unless barred

Explanation—A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies

Alterations in the section—The words 'either expressly or impliedly barred' have been substituted for the words 'barred by any enactment for the time being in force' which occurred in s 11 of the Code of 1882. The latter words were held to mean expressly barred (h)

Onus—A party seeking to oust the jurisdiction of ordinary Civil Courts must establish his right to do so (i)

Suits of a civil nature—Suits may be divided into two classes—(1) those which are of a civil nature and (2) those which are not of a civil nature. It is suits only of a civil nature which a civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain. A civil Court has no jurisdiction to try suits which are not of a civil nature. A suit is not of a civil nature if the principal or only question in the suit is a caste question or a question relating to religious rites or ceremonies. But when (1) a caste question or a question relating to religious rites or ceremonies is not the principal question in the suit but is merely a subsidiary question and (2) the principal question is of a civil nature as a question as to any right to property or to an office or to any other civil right and (3) the principal question which is of a civil nature cannot be determined without deciding the caste question or question relating to religious rites or ceremonies the Court has the power to decide the caste question or question relating to religious rites or ceremonies to enable it to decide the principal question (j). It is upon this principle that the Explanation to the section is based. We may therefore say that a suit is of a civil nature if the principal question in the suit relates to a civil right. The mere fact that the determination of such a question depends entirely on the decision of caste questions or questions as to religious rites or ceremonies does not take the suit out of the category of suits of a civil nature (see the Explanation to the section). We now proceed to consider the leading cases in which the Courts have refused to try suits on the ground either (1) that the principal question in the suit was a caste question or (2) that it related to religious rites or ceremonies

Suits in which the principal question is a caste question are not suits of a civil nature—A caste is any well defined native community (be it Hindu or Mahomedan) governed for certain internal purposes by its own rules and regulations (1). A caste question is one which relates to matters affecting the internal autonomy of the caste and its social relations (2).

To determine whether or not a question is a caste question, the test is—Would the cognizance of the matter in dispute by the Court be an interference with the autonomy of the caste? Would the Court be deciding the question which the caste as a self governing body is entitled to decide for itself? If yes, the question is a caste question and no civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain it (3). Thus a caste may pass a resolution depriving a member of man pan invitation, or invitation to dinner, or to muni or other ceremonies, for an alleged breach of a caste rule. The excluded member has no remedy in law, for all that he has lost is a social privilege, and not a legal right, and the caste is the only tribunal to which a casteman deprived of that privilege can resort. A civil Court has no power by its decree to compel the members of a caste to invite a casteman to dinner or to any ceremony (4). Similarly a Court has no power to compel barbers belonging to a certain caste to shave a casteman or to pare his nails though the party aggrieved may allege that he would lose caste by the loss of service at the hands of the barbers (5). On the same principle a member of a caste is not entitled to any remedy in law if the other members refuse to go to his house on the occasion of a death in his family and assist him in the removal of the dead body, though they may in doing so break a rule of the caste. It is not for a Court of law to enforce a caste rule or resolution; it is for the caste itself that makes the rule or passes the resolution to do so (6). Hence a Court will not compel a defaulting member to pay to the caste a sum of money which by a resolution of the caste every casteman is liable to pay on the occasion of a marriage in his family (7).

Expulsion from caste—To exclude a member of a caste from invitation to caste dinners or ceremonies is as stated above to deprive him of a social privilege. But to expel him from the caste is to deprive him of a legal right which forms part of his status. Hence a suit will be for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to be re-admitted into the caste and also for damages for expulsion from the caste (8). But to entitle the plaintiff to a decree, it must be shown that his excommunication was wrongful, and the Court will in such cases enquire into the validity of the sentence of excommunication. Excommunication is wrongful, if a member is expelled from the caste without opportunity of explanation being offered to him (9). It is also wrongful if a member is expelled for an alleged breach of a caste rule which, as a matter of fact, he has not broken (10). In the mufassal of Bombay, however, a suit does not lie for restoration to caste, the cognizance of such a suit being expressly barred by Bombay Regulation 11 of 1827, s. 21 (11). But a suit is maintainable for "damages" on account of an alleged injury to the caste and character of the plaintiff arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party.

S. 9. a right to parade bullocks on certain days (v) or to compel panjaris to adorn an idol at certain seasons (w) or to instal it in a particular temple instead of in another (x) There is no right of a civil nature involved in these cases

Suits for vindication of a mere dignity attached to an office are not suits of a civil nature.—A claim by a Swami (arch priest) that he is entitled to be carried on the high road of a town or village in a palanquin on ceremonial occasions will not be entertained by a civil Court (y). What is claimed by the plaintiff in such a case is a mere mark of honour appended to the office of a Swami. Civil Courts should discourage as much as possible claims of so unsubstantial and objectionable a nature and they ought not to be involved in the determination of trivial questions of dignity and privilege although connected with an office. For the same reason a suit will not lie for a declaration that the plaintiff as gurullal or spiritual leader is entitled to be received at a pagoda by the wardens of the pagoda with the honours and emoluments due to his rank on the occasion of the annual festival of the pagoda. The duty of individuals to submit to and perform certain religious observances in accordance with the ritual or conventional practices of their race or sect is in the absence of express legal recognition and provision an imperfect obligation of a moral and not a civil nature. Of such obligations the present civil Court cannot take cognizance (z). Following this rule the Courts have declined to entertain claims made by holders of religious office to precedence in worship such as a claim to be the first to worship the deity and to receive gifts of rice and coconuts on certain public religious ceremonies (a). They have likewise declined to decide disputes as to precedence or privilege between purely religious functionaries (b). It is important to note that the suit in each of the above cases was not to establish a right to an office but for a declaration that the plaintiff was by virtue of his office entitled to certain tokens of dignity or to certain offerings. In other words the suit was not for a claim to an office but to vindicate an alleged dignity attached to an office. A suit for an office is of a civil nature but a suit for vindication of a mere dignity though connected with an office, is not. But if honours be attached to an office by way of remuneration in other words as part of its emoluments, a civil Court can entertain a suit for such honours (c).

"Office"—Suits in which the principal question is as to a civil or legal right or suits of a civil nature. The right to an office is a right of a civil nature. Therefore suits in which the principal question relates to the right to an office are suits of a civil nature and they are not the less so because the right claimed may depend on the decision of caste questions or questions as to religious rites or ceremonies or even religious tenets (d). See the Explanation to the section.

Suits for secular office—When no remuneration attaches to the office of the secretary of an Association (registered under Act 21 of 1860) a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is the secretary of the Association and that his dismissal from the office was not justified by the rules of the Association is not maintainable in a civil Court, especially if the Association has the power to alter its rules from time to time. The reason is that in such a case no decree which a civil Court may pass in plaintiff's favour could prevent the Association from altering its rules and then dispensing with the plaintiff's services and employing some one else (e).

Suits for religious office.—Quære whether every suit for a religious office is a suit of a civil nature? The Explanation to the section assumes that a suit in which the right to an "office" is contested is a suit of a civil nature. Now an office may be either secular or religious in its character. We are here principally concerned with an office of a religious character, for the question as to religious rites and ceremonies contemplated by the Explanation can only arise when the right to a religious office is contested. Religious offices may be divided into two classes, namely—

- I—Those to which fees are appurtenant as of right, such as the office of the Ka: of Bombay, or of the Joshi: of a village or the Upadhyaya of a caste.
- II—Those to which no fees are attached but which entitle the holder thereof to receive such gratuities as may be paid to him, such as the office of pujari or officiating priests in a temple, or of the Aya of a math.

Fees are to be distinguished from gratuities. When fees are attached to an office, the holder of the office is entitled on performance of the services to the stipulated or customary fees. Thus a Ka: or Joshi: is entitled on performing a marriage ceremony to the marriage fee and if the fee is not paid to him, he may enforce payment by a suit. In fact, a fee is a sum which the holder of an office is entitled to demand as payment for the execution of functions attached to the office. Besides the fee paid to a Ka: or to a Joshi: on the occasion of a marriage, there may be gratuities paid to him which are entirely voluntary in their character. If a person invites a Joshi: for performing a marriage ceremony at his place, and pays him the fee, but no gratuity a suit will not lie at the instance of the Joshi: for payment to him of any sum by way of gratuity though it may be usual to pay gratuities on such occasions. the reason is that there is no obligation in law on the part of the person inviting a Joshi: to make any payment by way of gratuity (f). The same remark applies to holders of religious offices referred to in class II above.

The question which concerns us at present is whether a suit will lie at the instance of the holder of a religious office for disturbing him in the exercise of his office? If the office is wrongfully usurped can the person claiming to be the rightful holder of the office sue the intruder in a civil Court for a declaration that he is entitled to the office? Will a civil Court entertain such a suit? To answer these questions we must deal with the two classes of religious offices separately.

As regards religious offices of the first class that is offices to which fees are attached there is no doubt that a suit will lie against an intruder for a declaration that the office is vested in the plaintiff. Such a suit is a suit of a civil nature (g).

Turning now to religious offices of the second class the question that faces us is whether a suit will lie for an office to which no fees are attached? Different views have been held on this point by different Courts. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a suit by a person claiming to be entitled to a religious office against a usurper for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to the office is a suit of a civil nature, and will therefore be entertained by a civil Court though no emoluments are attached to the office at all. This conclusion is based upon the reasoning that a religious office though no fees are attached to it, is an office within the meaning of the Explanation to this section and that the section assumes that a suit for an office is a suit of a civil nature. The office in that case was that of musicians who chanted holy songs in a

I. 11. 21. (1) Upadhyaya—injunction against Pach of the caste on the part of the hereditary office of a priest of a civil nature in Antil or immovable

S 9. satra at a certain village (k) In another case, the office was that of a shebat, and the suit was by one member of a family against another for a declaration of a hereditary right to officiate as shebat at the worship performed by votaries at the foot of a certain tree It was held that the suit was maintainable In this case also there were no fees attached to the office, but voluntary offerings were made by the votaries (s) It is worthy of note that in both these cases the office was one attached to a place as distinguished from an absolutely personal office

On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit does not lie for a religious office to which no fees are attached According to that Court a religious office to which no fees are attached is not an office within the meaning of this section (j) The office in one of these cases was that of priest of Samayacharm, of which the duties were to exercise spiritual and moral supervision over a certain class of persons

As regards Bombay decisions, if we are to reconcile them all, we must divide them into two classes, namely, (1) those in which the religious office is attached to a temple, shrine, or sacred spot, and (2) those in which the office is entirely personal in its character And it may be safely said that a suit will lie for a religious office which is attached to a place, though no fees are appurtenant to it such as the office of officiating priests in a temple or of Ajya of a math (l) But a suit will not lie for an office to which no fees are attached if the office be personal in its character such as the office of Chaluady (i) (bearer on public occasions of the insignia of a caste), or the office of Guru (m)

devised to harmonize what would otherwise be a mass of conflicting decisions though it must be observed that even then there remains one Bombay decision in which the office was a personal one and there were no fees attached to the office and yet it was held that a suit would lie for the office The principal question in that case was whether a suit lies for the office of Ahatib (preacher) regard being had to the fact that no fees were attached to the office, and it was held that it does The Court said Had it been the intention of the Legislature that such a suit should not lie, the same would have been clearly provided for (n) But if it is a question of the intention of the Legislature, it may be said that the Explanation to the section, which did not occur in the Code of 1877, appears to have been suggested directly by a passage in a judgment

Lila (religious pageants), which does not carry with it any right to emoluments nor is attached to a shrine or temple or sacred spot cannot be enforced in a Court of law (q)

The Patna High Court has held that a right to officiate at funeral ceremonies performed upon the banks of the Ganges between certain points, which did not carry any fees with it, but merely gratuities, cannot be enforced in a Civil Court (r)

Suits for recovery of fees attached to an office are suits of a civil nature, but not suits for recovery of gratuities.—It is settled law that if a person usurps an office to which another person is entitled and receives the fees of the office, he is bound to account to the rightful owner for them and the rightful owner may sue the usurper to recover the fees properly payable to him. But the case is different where the payments are merely voluntary, and a suit will not lie to recover voluntary gratuities that may have been received by the usurper (s). The reason is that where voluntary offerings are made, they must be taken to have been intended for the very person who was then actually performing the ceremony whether rightfully or wrongfully and, further, that it is quite possible that no gratuities would have been given at all if the rightful owner officiated at the ceremony instead of the usurper (t). The same principles apply when a suit is brought by the lawful holder of an office against a member of the caste for employing the usurper for performing ceremonies which the rightful holder was entitled to perform. Thus a village priest may be entitled by hereditary right to officiate and take fees in the families of a particular caste in the village and if a member of the caste employs an intruder in the office to perform the ceremonies the village priest is entitled to recover from the casteman the fees which would properly be payable to him if he had been employed to perform those ceremonies (v). But a suit will not lie against a casteman for a gratuity which the party might have refused to give if he had pleased (t). If for determining the plaintiff's right to the fees claimed it becomes necessary to determine incidentally the right to perform the ceremony the Courts should try and decide that right (u). The above principles have been held to apply to batandar barbers who are entitled to render services as barbers on ceremonial occasions and to receive the customary fees (x).

The cases in which a suit by the rightful owner of a religious office against a usurper for recovery of voluntary gratuities has been held not to be maintainable must be distinguished from those where a suit is brought by a sharer in a religious office against his co-sharers for recovery of his share of the voluntary gratuities. In the latter class of cases it has been held that a suit will lie, for the basis of the claim in such cases is an agreement, expressed or implied that all the sharers should have a share in the gratuities (y).

Dues paid by baggais and shopkeepers to choudhris of baars are in the nature of voluntary payments hence a suit will not lie to recover such dues or for a declaration of the right to recover them (z).

Suits relating to caste property.—Suppose that a caste is divided into two factions, F1 and F2, and that F1 owns certain property which stands in the names of some of its members. If these members secede from faction F1 and go over to faction F2, a suit will lie to recover the property from them at the instance of faction F1 (a). Here the subject matter of the suit is property belonging to one section of the caste, and the claim is against persons outside that section. Suppose next, that a caste owns a property purchased out of the caste funds, and that it is subsequently divided into two factions F1 and F2. If faction F2 happens at the time of the division to be in possession of the caste property, faction F1 cannot maintain a suit against faction F2 for recovery of one half of the caste property, or its value (b). Here the subject matter of the suit is caste property, and the claim is not against an outsider, but against another section of the caste.

As regards user of caste property, it has been laid down that a majority of a caste has the right to regulate the use of the property, and the minority is bound by the resolution of the majority, provided the resolution is not so subversive of the interests of the minority as to amount to a complete denial of their rights. Thus if the majority of a caste passes a resolution that the caste oart should not be used for feasting any Brahmans and the minority invites Brahmans to a feast in the oart, a suit will lie to restrain the minority from using the oart in contravention of the resolution (c).

Suits for inspection of accounts of caste property—Such a suit relates purely to a caste question, and it cannot therefore be entertained by a civil Court (d).

Interference with temple property—Removal or alteration of namams or religious marks in a temple, which are recognized as the badges of a particular religious denomination amounts to an interference with property, and is a ground of action in civil Courts (e).

Interference with right of worship—Suits for a declaration of the right to worship or to offer prayers at a certain place are suits of a civil nature. It often happens that the members of a particular class are alone entitled to worship in the sanctuary of a temple, and to perform certain portions of the religious worship. Such a right is one of a civil nature, and it may be enforced by a suit in a civil Court (f). Similarly the right of burial is a civil right, and it has accordingly been held that an interference with the rights of the relatives of a deceased Mahomedan to recite prayers over his body before burial in front of a particular mosque being an invasion of a civil right, may be enforced by suit (g).

Religious processions—Members of a religious body possess the right to conduct a religious procession with its appropriate observances along a highway, and a suit will lie against those who prevent the procession with its observances. The worshippers in a mosque or temple which abut on a high road could not compel the processionists to interrupt their worship while passing the mosque or temple on the ground that there was continuous worship there. But no one sect can claim the exclusive use of the highway for their worship (h).

Suit to declare election of directors void and for injunction—Such a suit is of a civil nature and the Court is entitled to take cognizance of it. The matters involved in such a suit are not matters of internal management of the company (i).

Suit to administer the estate of a living Hindu debtor—Such a suit is not cognizable by a civil Court (j).

Suits expressly barred—The general rule of law is that when a legal right and an infringement thereof are alleged, a cause of action is disclosed, and unless there is a bar to the entertainment of a suit, the ordinary civil Courts are bound to entertain the claim (k). This is in substance the rule laid down in the present section which provides that suits, though of a civil nature, are not triable by civil Courts, if the cognizance of such suits is expressly or impliedly barred. By 'expressly barred' is meant barred by any enactment for the time being in force. Thus it is provided by the Income Tax Act,

(c) Laiya v. Waiya (1895) 19 Bom. 507

s. 39, that "no suit shall lie in any civil Court to set aside or modify any assessment made" under that Act (l). Similarly, it is provided by the Pensions Act 23 of 1871, s. 4, that except as provided by that Act, no civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government (m). But the provision must be express to exclude a suit of a civil nature from the cognizance of ordinary Courts. The mere fact that an enactment provides a summary remedy in a certain case does not constitute a bar to a regular suit. We may turn for an instance to O. 21, r. 95 (Code of 1882, s. 318). That rule provides a summary remedy to which a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree may resort to recover possession from a judgment debtor. But it does not say that no suit shall lie to recover possession. The purchaser may therefore resort to the remedy provided by that section, or he may at his option bring a regular suit (n). Further, the jurisdiction of a civil Court is not excluded unless the cognizance of the entire suit as brought is barred (o). The general rule is that statutes affecting the jurisdiction of Courts are to be construed so far as possible to avoid the effect of transferring the determination of rights and liabilities from the ordinary Courts to executive officers (p).

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the jurisdiction of civil Courts to try suits brought by superior holders to recover their dues from inferior holders is not barred by s. 85 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code [Act 5 of 1879] (q). It has been held by the same Court that s. 4 (c) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act is not a bar to a suit in which there is a claim arising out of the alleged illegality of proceedings taken for the realization of land revenue (r).

Suits impliedly barred—Besides suits of which the cognizance is expressly barred, there are suits which are barred by general principles of law, such as suits relating to acts of State and public policy. Thus a suit will not lie against the Secretary of State for damages for publication of a Government resolution in the Government Gazette respecting the conduct of a public servant, though it may amount to a libel. Such a publication is an act of State in respect of which no action lies (s). Similarly a suit will not lie for damages for defamatory statements made in the course of a judicial proceeding by a party or by a witness. The ground of this principle is that it concerns the public and the administration of justice that witnesses giving their evidence on oath in a Court of justice should not have before their eyes the fear of being harassed by suits for damages, but that the only penalty which they should incur if they give evidence falsely should be an indictment for perjury (t). See notes to s. 79 below. See also notes, Alterations in the section, on p. 18 above.

Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, ss. 523-524—A civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the recovery from Government of the proceeds of the sale of property attached and sold under ss. 523 and 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code (u).

political question is involved (t) But where the real object of the suit is to settle the right of succession to the throne and the property right involved is only contingent, the Court should decline jurisdiction (w)

10. [S. 12] No Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title where such suit is pending in the same or any other Court in British India having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed, or in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor General in Council and having like jurisdiction, or before His Majesty in Council

previously instituted suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title where such suit is pending in the same or any other Court in British India having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed, or in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor General in Council and having like jurisdiction, or before His Majesty in Council

Explanation—The pendency of a suit in a foreign Court does not preclude the Courts in British India from trying a suit founded on the same cause of action

Alterations in the section—The words 'proceed with the trial' have been substituted for the word 'try'. The words 'except where a suit has been stayed under section 20' which occurred at the commencement of the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, the words 'for the same relief' which occurred after the words 'previously instituted suit' and the words 'whether superior or inferior' which occurred after the words 'any other Court,' have been omitted. The words 'litigating under the same title' are new.

Scope and object of the section—The present section provides that where a suit is instituted in a Court to which the Code applies, the Court shall not proceed with the trial of the suit, if—first the matter in issue in the suit is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties, secondly the previously instituted suit is pending—

- (a) in the same Court in which the subsequent suit is brought, or
- (b) in any other Court in British India (whether superior, inferior or co-ordinate), or
- (c) in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor General in Council or
- (d) before His Majesty in Council, and thirdly where the previously instituted suit is pending in any of the Courts mentioned in cl (b) or cl (c) such Court is a Court of jurisdiction competent to grant the relief claimed in the subsequent suit (x)

The object of the section is to prevent Courts of concurrent jurisdiction from simultaneously trying two parallel suits in respect of the same matter in issue. B, residing in Calcutta, has an agent A at Calicut employed to sell his goods there. A sues B in Calicut claiming a balance due upon an account in respect of dealings between him and B. During the pendency of the suit in the Calicut Court, B institutes a suit against A in Calcutta for an account and for damages caused by A's alleged negligence. Here the matter in issue in B's suit is directly and substantially in issue in A's suit, further both the suits are between the same parties, therefore if the Court at Calicut = a Court of jurisdiction competent to grant the relief claimed in B's suit, the Calcutta Court must not proceed with the trial of B's suit and the suit in the Calicut Court being the one instituted prior in point of time should alone be proceeded with (y). But if A was B's agent at Pondicherry instead of at Calicut and the suit was brought by him in the Pondicherry Court the Calcutta Court would not be precluded from proceeding with the trial of B's suit the Pondicherry Court being a foreign Court. See the Explanation to the section.

Whether the subject matter of both suits must be the same—S 12 of the Code of 1892 contained the words for the same relief after the words 'previously instituted suit'. Hence it was necessary for the application of the section not only that the matter in issue in the second suit should also be directly and substantially in issue in the first suit but that the second suit must be for the same relief as that claimed in the first (z). The words 'for the same relief' have been omitted in the present section. The omission of these words it has been held does not alter the law as it stood under the old section. In a recent Calcutta case (a) Rankin J said. It does not follow because the words 'the same relief' are no longer in the section that sec 10 is applicable to suits for recovery of successive rents. The learned Judge held that the subject matter of both the suits must be the same and that the section does not apply to claims for rent or for debt which had not become due when the first suit was filed. The same view was taken in a recent Madras case where it was held that a suit could not be stayed under this section even if the main issue in both the suits was the same if the subject matter of the second suit was different from that of the first suit (b). Thus a previous suit for rent or for pension or for other recurring liability for a particular year is no bar to the trial of a subsequent suit for rent or for pension or other recurring liability for subsequent years. The effect of these decisions is that the expression 'matter in issue' in this section is equivalent to 'subject matter'.

Previously instituted suit—Note that it is the pendency of the previously instituted suit that constitutes a bar to the trial of the subsequent suit. The word 'suit' includes appeal. It also includes an appeal to His Majesty in Council (c). But it does not include an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council for the application may not be granted at all and if granted the applicant may not prefer any appeal (d). It seems that it does not also include applications under s 47 (e).

Shall not proceed with the trial—These words indicate the action to be taken by the Court under this section. The second suit is not to be dismissed as barred, it is only the trial of the suit that is not to be proceeded with. That may render the institution of a subsequent suit unnecessary in many cases but the section is no bar to the institution of such suit. May there are cases in which it is necessary for a party to institute a regular suit to establish a right claimed by him and failure to institute the suit within the period of limitation may preclude the party from asserting the right in any other suit or proceeding. Section not exhaustive—Sec. 11 of the Code provides that a decision on a matter directly and substantially in issue in a former suit may be res judicata in a subsequent proceeding. But the section is not exhaustive of the circumstances in which an issue is res judicata. The plea of res judicata rests on the principle that there must be a finality in litigation and the plea still remains apart from the limited provisions of the Code. Hence an issue may be res judicata though it may not have been decided in a former suit. Thus a decision on a question whether a gift over was valid in an administration suit may be res judicata in a subsequent proceeding in the same suit (i). It has similarly been held that a decree on a dispute as to the title to receive compensation under the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894, sec 31 (2) the decree not being appealed from, renders the question of title res judicata in a subsequent suit between the parties to the dispute or those claiming under them, whether or not the decree is to be regarded as one in a former suit within the meaning of this section (m). The binding force of such a judgment in such a case as the present depends not upon s 13 of Act 10 of 1877 (s 11 of the present Code), but upon general principles of law. If it were not binding there would be no end to litigation. (n). On the same principle it has been held that an order passed after contention in a probate proceeding is res judicata in a subsequent proceeding against the caveators who contested it (o). See notes. Orders in execution proceedings, on p 68 below

Conditions of res judicata—It is not every matter decided in a former suit that can be pleaded as res judicata in a subsequent suit. To constitute a matter res judicata the following conditions must concur

- I—The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit or issue must be the same matter which was directly and substantially in issue, either actually (Explanation III) or constructively (Explanation I) in the former suit (pp 31-39)
- II—The former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim. Explanation I is to be read with this Condition (p 49)
- III—The parties as aforesaid must have litigated under the same title in the former suit (p 54)
- IV—The Court which decided the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue is subsequently raised. Explanation II is to be read with this Condition (p 55)
- V—The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must have been heard and finally decided by the Court in the first suit. Explanation V is to be read with this Condition (p 61)

CONDITION I:—Explanation III herein

A.—Matter directly and substantially in issue

The following table sets forth the several matters which we have to consider under Condition I —

Matter in issue and pro forma defendant—It is only a matter directly and substantially in issue that can constitute res judicata. In other words to constitute a matter res judicata, it must have been, in the first place, in issue in the former suit, and, in the next place, it must have been in issue in that suit directly and substantially. If a matter was not in issue at all in the former suit it is clear that it could not constitute res judicata in the subsequent suit. If A sues B for damages for breach of a contract and B denies the contract, the factum of the contract is in issue between A and B. This is an illustration of the case in which a matter is in issue between the parties to a suit. There is one class of cases in which a matter put in issue by a plaintiff in a suit can never be in issue as between him and a defendant in that suit. Those are cases in which there are two or more defendants and there is no relief sought by the plaintiff against a particular defendant or set of defendants. A defendant against whom no relief is claimed is called pro forma defendant, he is merely a formal party to the suit. For it must be remembered that a person may be joined as defendant in a suit, though no relief is claimed against him, if his presence before the Court is necessary to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon the question involved in the suit [see O 1 = 10 (2), Code of 1882, s 32]. A, claiming to be entitled to possession of a certain tank as tenant of X sues B to recover possession thereof from him. X is joined as defendant but there is no relief claimed against him. The suit is dismissed on a finding that B, and not X, is the owner of the tank. Subsequently X sues B to recover possession of the tank. B contends that the suit ought to be dismissed, on the ground that the matter of the ownership of the tank was in issue in the former suit, and it was decided in his favour, in other words, that the suit is barred as res judicata. The suit is not barred as res judicata, for the matter of the ownership of the tank in the former suit was in issue between A and B and not between X and B, X being merely a formal party to that suit (p).

Matter directly and substantially in issue Explanation III—It is not enough to constitute a matter res judicata that it was in issue in the former suit. It is further necessary that it must have been in issue directly and substantially. A matter cannot be said to have been “directly and substantially” in issue in a suit, unless it was alleged by one party and denied or admitted, either expressly or by necessary implication by the other. It is not enough that the matter was alleged by one party (q).

(p) Brojo Behari Mitter v. Kedar Nath (1886) 12 Cal 580. Ramdas v. Parvatabai (1901) 25 Bom 589. Mahli v. Imam ud-din (1905) 27 All

59. (q) Sileo Eaton v. Sileo Sahai (1884) 6 All 353, 362.

5. 11. At the same time it is not necessary to constitute a matter "directly and substantially" in issue that a distinct issue should have been raised upon it, it is sufficient if the matter was in issue in substance (r). Similarly an issue is res judicata when the judgment of an appellate Court shows that the issue was treated as material, and was decided, although the decree passed merely affirms the decree of the lower Court which did not deal with the issue (s).

Matter collaterally or incidentally in issue.—Every suit must involve a matter 'directly and substantially' in issue. It may also involve a matter 'collaterally or incidentally' in issue. To constitute a matter res judicata it is necessary that it must be in issue 'directly and substantially' in the suit under trial, and that it must have been in issue also 'directly and substantially,' as distinguished from "collaterally or incidentally," in a former suit.

All matters involved in a suit may be 'directly and substantially' in issue, but they cannot all be "collaterally or incidentally" in issue. A collateral or incidental issue is one that is ancillary to a direct and substantive issue, the former = an auxiliary issue, the latter the principal issue. When we speak of a matter as being "collaterally or incidentally" in issue in a suit, it is understood that there is another matter which is "directly and substantially" in issue in that suit. A matter collaterally or incidentally in issue is ancillary or auxiliary to a matter 'directly and substantially' in issue.

Distinction between matter "directly and substantially" in issue and matter "collaterally or incidentally" in issue.—The leading case on the subject is Barra v Jackson (t). Every suit must involve a matter or matters in respect of which relief is claimed by the plaintiff. It may also involve a matter or matters which, though there is no relief claimed in respect of them, are brought in issue for the purpose of deciding on the matter or matters in respect of which relief is claimed.

Matter directly and substantially in issue.—Every matter in respect of which relief is claimed in a suit is necessarily a matter "directly and substantially" in issue.

Illustrations

1. A sues B for the rent due for the year 1907. The defence is that no rent is due. Here the claim for rent is the matter in respect of which relief is claimed. This therefore is a matter "directly and substantially" in issue.

2. A sues B, (1) for a declaration of title to certain lands, and (2) for the rent of those lands. B denies A's title to the lands, and contends that no rent is due. Here there are two matters in respect of which relief is claimed, namely, (1) the matter of title, and (2) the claim for rent. Both these are matters "directly and substantially" in issue.

Matter collaterally or incidentally in issue.—A matter in respect of which no relief is claimed, but which is put in issue for the purpose of enabling the Court to adjudicate upon a matter in respect of which relief is claimed, may be either "directly and substantially" in issue or it may be in issue "collaterally or incidentally." It would be a matter "directly and substantially" in issue, if it was necessary to decide it to find on the principal issue and if the judgment was based upon it. Otherwise it would be a matter "collaterally or incidentally" in issue.

Examination of pleadings and judgment.—Whether a matter has been dealt with in manner aforesaid is to be determined by a reference to the plaint, the written statement, the issues, and the judgment. The decree may also be referred to, but it is not enough to refer to the decree without the judgment, for a decree states merely how a suit is

In Steopartan v Ramnandan (v), the Judicial Committee, referring to the rule of res judicata, observed that "the application of the rule by the Courts in India should be influenced by no technical considerations of form, but by matter of substance within the limits allowed by law"

Rent suits and "matter directly and substantially" in issue—We now turn to cases in which the distinction between a matter "directly and substantially" in issue and a matter "collaterally or incidentally" in issue arises frequently. These cases may be divided into the following three classes—

A—Where the first suit is for rent and the subsequent suit is for title

B—Where both suits are for rent or other recurring liability

C—Where both suits relate to the rate of rent or the area for which rent is payable

We shall deal with these three classes in order

A First suit for rent, subsequent suit for title—In this class of cases it is clear that the subsequent suit being one for title, the question of title is a matter "directly and substantially" in issue in that suit. Whichever party therefore raises the plea of res judicata in that suit must show that the question of title was also "directly and substantially" in issue in the former suit, that is, in the previously decided suit. If the question of title has been in issue in its entirety in the former suit, it will be said to have been directly and substantially in issue in that suit. But if the issue in the former suit does not cover the entire question of title, in other words, if it falls short of going to the very root of the title, and is confined only to some of the incidents of title, the question of title will be said to have been "collaterally or incidentally" in issue in the former suit (u)

(a) A, claiming to be the chela and heir of a deceased mohunt, sues B (a tenant) for the rent of certain lands forming part of the estate of the mohunt. C claims that he, and not A, is the chela and heir of the deceased, and that he is therefore entitled to the rent. C is thereupon added as a defendant to the suit (see O 1, r 10, Code of 1882, s (32). The issues raised are—

1 Whether A or C is the chela and heir of the mohunt?

2 Whether any and what rent is due by B?

The Court finds that A is the chela and heir of the mohunt. It also finds that there is a sum of Rs 2,500 due by B for rent and it decrees A's claim.

Subsequently C sues A for a declaration that he is the chela and heir of the mohunt and claims that as such he is entitled to the whole of the property left by the mohunt. A contends that the question, who is the chela and heir of the deceased is res judicata. Is the question res judicata? The answer is that it is, for though the former suit was for rent, the entire question of title to the property of the deceased was directly

Note—In this and the following illustrations it is assumed that the other conditions of res judicata are present

(b) A, a Hindu, dies leaving a widow and a brother C. The widow sues B (a tenant) for the rent of certain property alleging that it was the separate property of her deceased husband. C claims to be entitled to the rent on the ground that it was the joint property of himself and his deceased brother and that he became entitled to it by survivorship. C is thereupon added as a defendant to the suit. The issues are—

1. Whether the deceased alone received the whole rent of the property in his lifetime, or whether the rent was received by him jointly with C?
2. Whether any and what rent is due by B?

The Court finds on the first issue that the deceased alone received the whole rent in his lifetime. (The finding on the second issue is unnecessary for our present purposes)

Subsequently C sues the widow for a declaration that he and his brother were joint, and claims the said property by right of survivorship. The question whether the deceased and C were joint or separate is not res judicata for it was not "directly and substantially" in issue in the former suit. It was in issue in that suit only "collaterally or incidentally," for it will be seen on referring to the first issue in that suit that it did not cover the entire question of C's title, but related merely to the joint or separate receipt of rent. Ran Bahadur v. Luchu Koer (1885) 11 Cal 301, 12 I A 23. Srihari v. Khatisk Chandara (1897) 24 Cal 569.

B. Both suits for rent or other recurring liability—The same principles that apply to the preceding class of cases also apply here. Thus where A sues B for rent due for a particular period, and the defence is that A has no title to the land of which the rent is claimed, then, if a direct issue is raised and decided on the question of title the decision will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by A against B for the rent for a subsequent period either of the same (x) or other (y) property held under the same title. But if there is no direct issue raised on the question of title, and the finding falls short of going to the very root of the title upon which the claim for rent is based it will not have the effect of res judicata. If the question of title is gone into in the previous suit, not as if the right of rent were sought to be established for one particular year but once for all, it will be said to have been directly and substantially in issue. But if the question of title is gone into in the previous suit not as if the right of rent were sought to be established once for all, but for one particular year, it will be said to have been in issue collaterally or incidentally. These principles also apply to other cases of recurring liability, such as malikana (x), maintenance (a), interest (b), annuity (c) &c

Illustration

A sues B for rent due for the year 1903. The defence is that the land is rent free. An issue is raised, "whether the land is rent free." The Court finds that the land is rent free, and A's suit is dismissed. Subsequently A sues B, claiming rent for the year 1904. B again sets up the same defence, namely, that the land is rent free. Here the question of A's right to recover the rent having been "directly and substantially" in issue in the previous suit the suit for the rent for 1904 is barred as res judicata. Rajhal Doss v. Hera (1871) 22 W R 289, Venkatachalapati v. Krishna (1890) 13 Mad 287, Lishnu v. Ramling (1902) 26 Bom 25, Natesa v. Venkatarama (1907) 30 Mad 510, *Ducarka Das v. It may here be observed that each year's rent is in itself a separate and entire cause of action, and where a suit is brought for the rent due for a particular year, a judgment obtained in that suit, whatever the defence may have been, would seem only to extend to the subject matter of the suit, and hence the landlord is at liberty to bring another suit for the next year's rent and the tenant is at liberty to set up to that suit any defence he thinks proper. The above proposition, however, is subject to this, and here comes in the doctrine of res judicata, that neither party is at liberty to re open in the suit for rent for the next year any question that was substantially and necessarily tried and determined between them in the suit for rent for the previous year (d). For the essence of the doctrine of res judicata is that where a material issue has been tried and determined between the same parties in a proper suit and in a competent Court as to the status of one of them in relation to the other or as to a right or title claimed by either of them against the other, it cannot again be tried in another suit between them (e).

Maintenance—As regards maintenance, it is to be noted that a decree for maintenance at a particular rate is no bar to a subsequent suit for maintenance at an enhanced rate on the ground of altered circumstances for the rate of maintenance is a variable quantity changing from time to time according to the circumstances of the parties affected by the decree (f).

C—Rate of rent or area for which rent is payable—In this class of cases also both the suits are for rent, the first suit being for rent for a particular period, and the second for rent for a subsequent period. The matter which is pleaded as res judicata is not the plaintiff's title to the land of which the rent is claimed, but the rate of rent or the area for which rent is payable. If the Court in the first suit tries and determines the issue, what is the proper rate of rent," or "what is the proper area for which rent is payable, it is clear that the issue relating from its very form not to the rent for a particular period but to the rent payable for the full term of the lease, the question of the rate or of the area as the case may be will be, res judicata in all subsequent suits for rent for the remaining period of the lease (g).

The decision in a previous rent suit, whether ex parte or contested, operates as res judicata in a subsequent rent suit even for a different period, if it decides any question which arises in the suit or omits to decide a question which ought to have been decided if objection were taken by a party (h). See ill (5) on p 41 below.

Ex parte decrees.—In the case of a suit in which a decree is passed ex parte [see O 9, s 6, Code of 1882, s 100] the only matter that can be 'directly and substantially' in issue is the matter in respect of which relief has been claimed by the plaintiff in the plaint. A matter in respect of which no relief is claimed cannot be "directly and substantially" in issue in a suit in which a decree is passed ex parte though the Court may have gone out of its way and declared the plaintiff to be entitled to relief in respect of such matter.

Even if the Court in the former suit had declared that A was entitled to rent at the rate of Rs 2 per square yard, the question of rate would not be res judicata, for A had not asked for a declaration in that suit in respect of the rate of rent. A's claim in the former suit was merely for arrears of rent Rs 500, and the decree in that suit has no greater effect than evidence that Rs 500 was due when the decree was passed. Had A in the former suit also prayed for a declaration in respect of the rate of rent as part of the substantive relief, and had the Court then declared that the rate of rent was Rs. 2, the question of rate would have been res judicata though the decree was passed ex parte, for it would then have been a matter "directly and substantially" in issue. Modhusudan v Brae (1889) 16 Cal 300

Explanation IV applies to et parte decree also. See ill (5) on p 41 below, and ill (2) cited under Rule II on p 44 below

Decree for injunction and res judicata.—A sues B for an injunction restraining B from doing certain acts. The injunction is granted. B repeats the acts complained of in the suit. A again sues B for an injunction. The suit is barred as res judicata, for the relief claimed is covered by the injunction granted in the former suit, and A's remedy is to proceed against B in execution of the decree [O 21, r 32]. Where the decree is passed by a chartered High Court, A may proceed against B for contempt of the Court's order. Ram Saran v Chatar Singh (1901) 23 All 465. See notes to s 50 below

Decree for restitution of conjugal rights and res judicata.—A sues B, his wife, for restitution of conjugal rights. Restitution is granted, and B goes and lives with A (that is to say, the decree is satisfied). B again leaves A, and A again sues B for the same relief. The suit is not barred as res judicata. Keshavlal v Parlati (1894) 19 Bom 327. [The distinction between this and the preceding case is that while in a suit for injunction the defendant is for ever restrained from doing the acts complained of, the wife cannot be directed in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights to live with her husband for the rest of her life, for many things may occur entitling her to leave him, e.g., gross cruelty.]

Decree conditional on payment of money.—A decree in a former suit for possession of property conditional on the payment of a sum of money to the defendant is no bar to a subsequent suit for possession after the expiration of the period within which he might have obtained possession by execution of the decree (i)

It is the matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit, and not the subject-matter thereof, that forms the test of res judicata—Hence it follows that though the subject matter of the second suit may be entirely different from the subject matter of the first, yet if a matter which is directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit was also directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit, the decision on the matter so in issue in the previous suit will operate as res judicata so as to bar the trial of that matter in the subsequent suit. Thus if A claims certain property as the adopted son of X, and the defendant denies the adoption, a finding in A's favour on the issue as to adoption will be binding on the defendant as res judicata in a subsequent suit by A against the same defendant to recover another property claimed under the same title (j). It is not open to the defendant to contend that the pro perties claimed in the two suits being different, the decision on the question of A's adoption in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the second. On the same principle where in a suit brought by A against B for possession of one of two properties comprised in a sale deed passed by B to A, B contends that the deed is fictitious, and the Court finds that the deed is fictitious, the finding that the sale deed is invalid will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by A against B to recover the other property under the same sale deed (l). Similarly, in the illustration cited under class B of rent suits (p 34 ante) it is no answer to the plea of res judicata that the subject matters of the two suits are different. The reason is that the matter directly and substantially in issue in both the suits is the same, namely, whether the particular land of which the rent is claimed is rent free, and the decision therefore on that issue in the first suit operates as res judicata in the subsequent suit. But the decision cannot apply to other lands held by B and A, unless they form part of the same tenure (l).

From the same fundamental principle that the matter directly and substantially in issue, and not the subject matter, constitutes the test of res judicata, it also follows that where a matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit is not the same as that in a previously decided suit, the trial of that matter will not be barred as res judicata, though the subject matter of the two suits may be the same (m).

Where both the matter directly and substantially in issue and the subject matter are the same in both the suits, the matter in issue will be res judicata not because of the identity of the subject matter, but because of the identity of the matter directly and substantially in issue (n). Where the matter directly and substantially in issue and the subject matter are both different in the two suits, the matter in issue is not res judicata not because the subject matters are different, but because the matters directly and substantially in issue in the two suits are different (o).

Former suit: Explanation I—We have said above that a decision in a former suit may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit. What is the meaning of "former suit"? Does it refer to the suit that has been first instituted or to the suit that has been first decided? The answer is that it refers to the suit that has been first decided, in other words "former suit" means a previously decided suit. The result therefore is that if suit No. 2 is instituted after the date of the institution of suit No. 1, and suit No. 2 is decided first, the decision in suit No. 2 may operate as res judicata in suit No. 1 (p). The same rule applies to appeals (q). Explanation I, which is new, does no more than give effect to these decisions.

Suits tried together one judgment—A sues B for possession of certain premises alleged to have been let to B as a monthly tenant. B then sues A for a declaration that he holds the premises under a lease from A of which two years are yet to expire. Both the suits are heard together, and only one judgment is delivered in both, the finding of the Court being that B held the premises not under a lease as alleged by him, but as a monthly tenant. A decree is passed in A's suit directing B to deliver up possession, and a separate decree is passed in B's suit dismissing the suit with costs. B does not appeal from the decree passed against him in A's suit, but prefers an appeal from the decree passed against him in his own suit. A contends that the appeal is barred as res judicata stating as a reason that no appeal having been preferred by B within the period of limitation from the decree in his (i.e.) suit,

5. 11. that decision became final, and that decision having been given in a "former suit," the matter could not be re tried in the appeal from the decision in B's suit Does the decree passed in A's suit operate as res judicata so as to preclude the appellate Court from hearing the appeal preferred by B from the decree passed in his (B's) suit? No, according to the Calcutta and Madras High Courts, the reason given being, that there being but one judgment in both suits, neither suit can be said to be a "former suit" in relation to the other (r) Yes, according to a three judges decision of the Allahabad High Court in Zaharia v Debia (s), the reason given being that if B's appeal were heard and the appellate Court reversed the decree of the lower Court, there would be two inconsistent decrees on the files of the Court, the one in A's suit (in which no appeal was preferred by B) in A's favour, and the other in B's suit in B's favour, in respect of the same matter in issue, and this would cause a complete impasse in execution proceedings In Zaharia's case, two rival suits for pre-emption in respect of the same sale were brought by two claimants, A and B, each of whom asserted, as against the other, that he had a paramount title to pre-empt A was made a party defendant in B's suit and B was made a party defendant in A's suit A's suit was decreed and B's suit was dismissed B appealed from the decree in his own suit, but he did not prefer any appeal from the decree in A's suit It was held that as the same issue had been raised in both the suits and the decision of it in A's suit had become final, no appeal having been preferred from it, it operated as res judicata, and the issue could not be re opened and tried in the appeal preferred by B in his own suit The decision in Zaharia v Debia was treated in subsequent cases (t) as laying down a general rule to be followed in all cases in which an unappealed decree, passed in contemporaneous proceedings arising out of the same dispute, was outstanding in the lower Court The question came up again before a Full Bench of the same Court in Ghansham Singh v Bhola Singh (u) In that case G sued B for a sale of certain property mortgaged by B to G The trial judge passed a preliminary decree for sale, but did not give G his costs He also disallowed B's contention that the amount of interest claimed was excessive G appealed from the decree in so far as it disallowed costs B appealed from the decree as to the amount of interest Both appeals were heard together and were decided by one judgment and both appeals were allowed, but two separate decrees were passed, the terms of which were identical, each comprising the decision in both appeals G appealed to the High Court from the decree in B's appeal [as to interest], but did not appeal from the decree in his own appeal [as to costs] In fact, the latter decree being in his favour he had no occasion to do so Upon these facts it was held by the Full Bench that the fact that no appeal was preferred by G from the decree in his appeal was no bar to the hearing of the appeal from the decree passed in B's appeal The Full Bench held that Zaharia v Debia was rightly decided on its own facts, and that the cases cited in foot note (f) must be treated as no longer law They also held that Damodar Das v Sheo Pam Das (v), which was treated in some cases as overruled by Zaharia v Debia, was rightly decided In the course of the judgment the learned judges said "Where it appears to an appellate Court that there are two decrees arising out of two suits heard together or raising the same question between the same parties, or arising out of two appeals to a subordinate appellate Court, and only one of such decrees is brought before it in appeal, and there is nothing prejudicial to the appellant in the decree from which no appeal has been brought which is not raised and cannot be set right if the appeal which he has brought succeeds, the right of appeal is not barred either by the rule of res judicata, or at all, by reason of his failure to appeal from the decree which does not prejudice him It would indeed be wrong for an appellant to appeal against a decree which did not prejudice him and to which he did not object, or to appeal against two duplicate decrees where an appeal against one of them would be sufficient, and he is certainly under no obligation to do so. The ultimate rights of the parties must be adjusted and regulated according to the final decision of the last Court of appeal." The decisions of the Lahore Court on this point are not uniform (w).

Suits tried together separate judgments—D brings a criminal case against P alleging that P used abusive language to him. That case is dismissed. P then sues D for damages for malicious prosecution. Subsequently D sues P for damages for using abusive language to him. The suits are tried together, the issue raised being whether P used abusive language to D. It is found that he did not, and two separate judgments are pronounced, the Court decreeing P's suit, and dismissing D's suit. D appeals from the decree in P's suit, but does not appeal from the decree in his own suit. Held that D not having appealed from the decree in his own suit, that decree operated as res judicata in the other suit so as to bar the appeal preferred by him in P's suit (x).

Suit.—"There is no definition of the word 'suit,' probably because it is not possible to frame one which will satisfactorily survive every test. But on the other hand it is not difficult to decide in the vast majority of cases whether a proceeding is in fact a suit or whether it is merely a summary or subsidiary application" (y). In the case of Venkatachandrappa v Venkatarama (z), where the proceeding was held not to be a suit, it was said, "suit is a very comprehensive term. It includes any proceeding in a court of justice by which a party pursues the remedy which the law gives him. If a right is litigated between parties in a court of justice, the proceeding by which the decision of the Court is sought is a suit."

The matter of which the trial is barred under this section must have been heard and decided in a former suit. A proceeding under s. 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, for a declaration of title and for possession of property attached by the Insolvency Court as being property of the insolvent has been held to be a "suit," and the decision in such proceeding is a bar to a subsequent suit, by the applicant in a civil Court for the same relief (a). But an application to file an award under Sch. II, para. 20, is not a "suit," and the refusal to file the award is no bar to a subsequent suit to enforce the award (b). See notes, "Orders in execution proceedings," on p. 68 below.

B.—Explanation IV : Matter directly and substantially in issue "constructively."

Matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack or defence.—A matter directly and substantially in issue may be either "actually" in issue or it may be in issue "constructively." In all the cases cited above, where a matter was held to have been in issue directly and substantially, it was "actually" in issue directly and substantially, for it was actually alleged by one party and denied by the other. It often happens that a matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack by the plaintiff to substantiate the relief claimed by him in the suit is not alleged by him as a ground of attack, and also that a matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence by the defendant is not set up as a ground of defence. A matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack or

5 11. defence in the former suit, but which has not been alleged as a ground of attack or defence, will be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit (Explanation IV) That is to say, though it has not been actually in issue directly and substantially, it will be regarded as having been constructively in issue directly and substantially. This section draws no distinction between the claim that was actually made in a suit, and the claim that might and ought to have been made. Where a matter has been actually in issue, it is necessary, to constitute res judicata, that it should have been heard and finally decided. But where a matter has been constructively in issue, it could not, from the very nature of the case be heard and decided, and it will be deemed to have been heard and decided against the party omitting to allege it. This is in accordance with the view of the section taken by the High Courts of Allahabad and Bombay (c) In Kailash Mondal v Baroda Sundari Das (d), Banerjee J, observed that though a matter, which might and ought to have been made ground of attack or defence should be deemed as provided by Explanation IV, to have been directly and substantially in issue, yet it could not be deemed to have been 'heard and finally decided,' as there was nothing in Explanation IV to suggest that such matter should also be deemed to have been heard and finally decided. This view was followed in a subsequent case (e) But this view, it is submitted, is not correct, and it has been rejected by the same Court in later cases (f), and also by the Chief Court of the Punjab (g) Moreover, in a recent case, the Judicial Committee took exception to the language in which the observations of Banerjee, J, were couched saying that the language was not so careful as it might have been (h) The Privy Council case illustrates the rigidity with which the principle laid down in Explanation IV is to be applied

The Court finds that A and X were separate, and A's suit is dismissed. acquired property of A, and decrees the widow's claim. Subsequently B sues the widow to recover the same property from her, now claiming the same as a donee under A's will. The suit is barred as res judicata. B might and ought to have set up the claim under the will as a ground of defence in the former suit. The suit is dismissed on the ground that the adoption is not proved. A then sues B to recover the same property claiming it as C's bandhu. The suit is barred as res judicata. A ought to have in the first suit claimed the property in the alternative as C's bandhu. Masilamania v Thirutengadam (1908) 31 Mad 385.

4. A, claiming as the next reversioner of a deceased Hindu, sued his widow for a declaration that a gift by her to D of property inherited by her from her husband was void. D was joined as a party defendant, and so also G who claimed to be a reversioner nearer than A. As to G, A alleged that he was colluding with the widow and the donee D. The defence was that G was the nearest reversioner and the only person entitled to dispute the gift. In this state of pleadings the widow died. On the death of the widow the question of collusion became comparatively unimportant, for if G was the nearest heir, A could get no title to the property. A then applied for leave to amend the plaint by setting forth the death of the widow, and claiming that he had become entitled to institute a suit for possession and by setting up a family custom that he was equal in degree with G. The application was rejected on the ground that it was an attempt to introduce a new case. The question then arose whether it was worth while contesting the suit. A's counsel admitted that, apart from custom, A was one degree more remote than G, and that if A could not make out the case of a family custom, the suit must fail. The trial judge thereupon dismissed the suit with costs but gave liberty to A to bring a fresh suit for possession. Subsequently A sued D and G for possession of one half of the property, founding his title on family custom. The Privy Council held that the second suit was barred, for A "might and ought" to have alleged the family custom in the first suit, it being clearly a ground of attack in that suit. As the first suit was dismissed, and not withdrawn under O 23, the trial Judge had no power to grant leave to bring a fresh suit. Faleh Singh v Jagannath Balsh Singh (1925) 52 I A 100 47 All 158 (25) A PC 55.

5. A sues B, C, D and E as joint tenants for rent on the basis of a pottah. The property in respect of which the rent is claimed consists of 25 kuttas of land. None of the defendants appears in the suit and an ex parte decree is passed against them. A then sues B, C, D and E for rent for a subsequent period. B appears and contends that he does not hold the land jointly with C, D and E, and that he is liable only for one fourth rent for one fourth of the whole area. Is B estopped from setting up the case of a separate tenancy? Yes, because he might and ought to have set up that case in the previous suit. It is immaterial that the decree in the previous suit was passed ex parte. Sarojini v Lakh Priya (1924) 29 C W N 253, 85 I C. 123, (25) A C 427.

Test.—The question whether a matter might have been made a ground of attack or defence in the former suit rarely presents any difficulty. Whether it ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence depends on the particular facts of each case. As a general rule we may say that if a matter could have been set up as a ground of attack or defence in the former suit, and if its introduction into that suit was necessary for a complete and final decision of the right claimed by the plaintiff therein, it will be deemed to be a matter which ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence in that suit, unless the matters in that and the subsequent suit are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion (s). Thus in all (l) above the title by heirship could have been made a ground of attack in the alternative in the first suit, it was not forbidden by any rule of pleading, moreover, it was necessary for the complete and final disposal of all questions as to A's right to the property. Further, the question in both suits being the same, namely, whether A was entitled to the property or B, the title by survivorship and the title by heirship could not be said to be so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion. It may appear at first sight that the two matters are dissimilar, for the title by survivorship and the title by heirship have to be supported by different evidence. But the test of evidence which was brought to the front in some old decisions (j) is not a satisfactory one, and though it was advanced in argument in two cases before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, it was not even noticed in the judgments (k). The reason is obvious, for when a plaintiff sets up alternative grounds of attack, or when a defendant sets up alternative grounds of defence, the evidence in support of such alternative grounds must in the majority of cases, be different. But where the evidence in support of one ground is such as might be destructive of the other ground, the two grounds, it has been said, need not be set up in the same suit. The reason given is that the test of determining whether both the grounds ought to have been set up in the same suit is afforded by the provisions of O 2, r 1, and the provisions of that rule as to the framing of suits are only to be applied "as far as practicable" (l).

It is clear that it cannot be said of any matter that it ought to have been set up as a ground of attack in a former suit, if its introduction would have been incongruous to the matter of that suit (m). Thus a person claiming certain property on the allegation that it is wakf property and that he is the manager thereof is not bound to claim the same property in the same suit alternatively in his own right in the event of its being held that the property was not wakf property. "Having asserted that the property was wakf property, [he] could not have consistently claimed the same property as [his] personal property except possibly in an alternative form [He was] however, not under an obligation to adopt the latter course. The mere fact that he could have claimed the property in the alternative as his own property is no ground for saying that he ought to have done so (n). See Rule IV below.

The decisions bearing on this branch of the subject are numerous and at first sight conflicting. A careful examination of these decisions leads to the following four Rules.

Rule 1—Where the right claimed in both suits is the same, the subsequent suit will be barred as res judicata though the right in the subsequent suit may be sought to be established by a title different from that in the first suit.

But the dismissal of a plaintiff's suit for the recovery of land based on an alleged lease is no bar to a subsequent suit for the recovery of the same land on the strength of his general title, the reason given being that the legal relation put forward in the subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit [see ill (4)].

[In this and the following rules when it is said that the subsequent suit is barred as res judicata, it is understood that it is barred by virtue of Explanation IV, and that the other conditions of res judicata are present.]

2 A Hindu, H, dies leaving a widow W, and a son in law, S, being the husband of a predeceased daughter, D. W sues S, as the heir of her husband H, to recover certain property, alleging that it forms part of the estate of H. The defence is that H had made a gift of the property to his daughter, D, and that on D's death, S as D's husband, became entitled to the property as D's heir. W alleges that the deed of gift relied upon by S is a forgery. The Court finds that the deed of gift is genuine, and the suit is dismissed. W then sues S to recover the same property, alleging that it being found that the property belonged to D, she is entitled to the property as the heir of her daughter, D. The suit is barred as res judicata. Here the right claimed in both the suits is the same, namely the right to the property in question. In the first suit it was claimed by W as her husband's heir. In the second suit it is sought to be established by her by a different title, namely, as her daughter's heir. W "might and ought" to have claimed in the alternative as her daughter's heir in the former suit. Having failed to do so, her title, as her daughter's heir, will be deemed to have been "directly and substantially" in issue in the former suit, and it will also be deemed to have been heard and finally decided against her in that suit. Denobundhoo v Kristomonee Dossee (1877) 2 Cal 152, dissented from in Ummatha v Cheria (1882) 4 Mad 308. The Madras case falls within the Exception rather than the Rule.

3 A lends Rs 50,000 to a Hindu widow on a mortgage of her husband's property. The widow then surrenders the property to B, the reversionary heir of her husband, on B agreeing to pay all her debts. A sues B and the widow to recover Rs 50,000 by sale of the mortgaged property. A also asks for a personal decree against the widow, but he does not ask for a personal decree against B. B is joined as a defendant on the ground that the mortgaged property formed part of the property transferred by the widow to him. The Court finds that the mortgage is not binding upon the husband's estate, and the suit against B is accordingly dismissed. As against the widow, a personal decree is passed for the amount of the loan. A realises Rs 5,000 only from the widow, and after her death, he sues B for the balance of the money due under the decree (that is to say, A asks for a personal decree against B for the balance), alleging that B was personally liable under the agreement with the widow to pay her debts. The suit is barred as res judicata, for A "might and ought" to have alleged in the former suit that if the mortgage was not binding on the estate, B was at all events personally liable to pay the debt in consequence of the agreement which he (B) had entered into with the widow. Kameswar Pershad v Rajkumar (1893) 20 Cal 79, 19 I A 234.

Note.—Suppose that in the above illustration, A had applied in the first suit for amendment of the plaint by adding a claim for relief against B personally, but the application was refused. In such a case it has been held that the subsequent suit would not be barred. Alagirisami v Sundareswara (1898) 21 Mad 278, Thalore v Thalore (1890) 14 Bom 31. But this view, it is submitted, is not correct. Fateh Singh v Jagannath Balshah (1925) 52 I A 100, 47 All 158 ('25) A PC 55.

4 A sues B to recover certain land from him, alleging that B held the land under a lease, and that the lease had expired. The lease is not proved, and the suit is dismissed. Subsequently A sues B to recover the same land on the strength of his title. The suit is not barred as res judicata. Zamrin of Calicut v Narayanan (1899) 22 Mad 323, Kutti Ali v Chindan (1900) 23 Mad 629, Kandunni v Kallamma (1886) 11 Mad 251, Ummatha v Cheria (1882) 4 Mad 308, Girdhar v Dayabhai (1884) 8 Bom 174.

Rule 11—If a matter which forms a ground of attack in the subsequent suit could have been alleged as a ground of defence in the former suit, but was omitted to be so alleged in that suit, it will be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in that suit within the meaning of Explanation IV

This rule contemplates cases in which the plaintiff in the subsequent suit was defendant in the former suit

2 A and B two Hindu brothers who have become separate in estate, own a garden which has not yet been divided between them. A dies leaving a widow who sells A's half share in the garden to C. After the death of the widow, C sues B for partition of the garden, and a decree ex parte is passed under which he (C) enters into possession of a moiety of the garden. B then sues C to recover possession of the moiety sold by A's widow to C, alleging that the sale was made by the widow without legal necessity, and that on the death of the widow, he became entitled to the moiety as the reversionary heir of A. The suit is barred as res judicata. B might and ought to have raised the question of the validity of the sale as a ground of defence in the former suit Shyama Charan v Mrinmayi Debi (1904) 31 Cal. 79

3 A mortgagee, who holds the mortgaged property also as lessee from the mortgagor sues the mortgagor to recover Rs. 3,000, being the amount of the mortgage debt. At the date of the suit the mortgagee owes Rs. 4,000 to the mortgagor for rent under the lease, and this sum the mortgagor claims to set off against the mortgage debt under an express agreement in that behalf. The agreement is not proved, and a decree is passed against the mortgagor for Rs. 3,000. The property is sold in execution of the decree, and it is purchased by the mortgagee with the leave of the Court. The mortgagor then sues the mortgagee to have the sale set aside and for a declaration that the mortgage debt is extinguished now claiming that a general account may be taken as between him and the mortgagee, and that in taking such account the rent due to him may be set off against the mortgage debt. The suit is barred, for the mortgagor might and ought to have set up that claim in the alternative in the former suit Mahabir Pershad v Macnaghten (1899) 16 Cal. 692 16 I. A. 107

4 A, who owns a share in a village mortgages it to B, and sells it subsequently to C. C sues B for redemption of the mortgage, and obtains a decree. Subsequently B sues C for pre-emption of the share sold by A to C, alleging that he is a co-sharer in the village and entitled as such to a right of pre-emption. The suit is not barred. The right of pre-emption not being a 'vested and ascertained' right when B filed his written statement in the former suit, it could not have been properly pleaded by B as an answer to the claim for redemption in that suit Ram Chand v Durga Prasad (1901) 26 All. 61

1 A sues B for possession of certain lands alleged to have come to his share on a partition of joint family property with B. The defence is that the family property has not yet been divided, and the suit is dismissed on a finding to that effect. A subsequent suit by A against B for partition of the family property is not barred. Shivram v Narayan (1881) 11 Bom 27, Konerrav v Gurrat (1881) 5 Bom 589, Nilo v Gound (1886) 10 Bom 24, contra, Bheela v Bhuggoo (1878) 3 Cal 23, which was dissented from in Ummalha v Cheria (1882) 4 Mad 308.

2 A, alleging that B held certain lands from him under a lease and that the lease had expired, sues B to recover Rs 500 for use and occupation of the land. The defence is that the lease is a subsisting lease, and the suit is dismissed on a finding to that effect. A subsequent suit by A to recover Rs 500 as rent payable under the lease is not barred. Watson v Dhonendra (1878) 3 Cal 6.

[Note the peculiar character of the cases cited above.—In ill. (1), A first sues on the basis of a partition, the Court finding that there was no partition, and A subsequently sues for partition, in ill. (2), A first sues on the basis that the lease has expired, the Court finding that the lease has not expired and A subsequently sues on the basis that the lease is a subsisting lease. For other cases of a similar nature, see foot note (g).]

3 A suit by A against B in 1869 to recover a talukdari estate is dismissed on a finding that the estate had become the absolute property of B under a conditional sale made by A to B in 1853. A then sues B in 1875 for redemption of the same property, alleging that he had mortgaged the property as absolute owner thereof to B in 1854. The suit is not barred. It may be difficult to reconcile the position of B as mortgagee in 1854 with his position as absolute owner in 1853. But if it be established that A was mortgagor in 1854, why should he be debarred of his right [of redemption] merely because at a certain date [i.e. in 1853] he may have had no right to the property at all? Amanat Bibi v Imdad Husain (1888) 15 Cal 800, 15 I A 106, Balbhaddar v Pam Lal (1904) 26 All 501.

4 A sues B for redemption of a mortgage alleged to have been executed in 1856 of 50 cawnies of land. B denies the genuineness of the mortgage, and alleges that 14 out of the 50 cawnies were mortgaged to him in 1853, and that the 14 and the remaining 36 were sold to him by A in 1855. The mortgage is not proved and the suit is dismissed. A then sues B to redeem the 14 cawnies on the footing of the mortgage of 1853. The suit is not barred. Ramaswami v Vythinatha (1903) 26 Mad 760, Ieerana v Muthu Kumara (1924) 27 Mad 102, Parambath v Puthengattil (1905) 28 Mac 406, Thiruvaila v Thiruthiyal (1906) 29 Mad 153, Mahabir v Purbhoo Nath (1907) 12 C W N 292, Pam Sahai v Ahmad Begam (1911) 33 All 302, 9 I C 53.

5 A, alleging that he mortgaged certain lands to B with possession, sues B for redemption, the suit being brought by him as mortgagor. A fails to prove the alleged mortgage, and the suit is dismissed. A then sues B for possession of the same lands now claiming as owner thereof. The suit is not barred. Mahomed Ibrahim v Shail Hanja (1911) 35 Bom 507, 12 I C 387.

For other cases under this rule, see foot note (r)

Rule IV.—It cannot be said of a relief which is claimed in the first suit would have made that suit bad for multifariousness that it ought to have been made a ground of attack in that suit (s)

Application of the above rules to suits on mortgage—If a mortgagee, in a suit for redemption against him by the mortgagor, omits to obtain an order for sale of the mortgaged property on failure of payment by the mortgagor of the mortgage debt within the time allowed for redemption he will be precluded from bringing a separate suit for sale in default of payment by the mortgagor within the time afore said. The mortgagee might and ought to have claimed the right of sale in the suit for redemption brought against him (t)

A prior mortgagee, who is made a party to a suit brought by a subsequent mortgagee on his mortgage, is not bound to set up his claim under his prior mortgage, unless his mortgage is impugned or unless it is sought to be postponed to the subsequent mortgage. If the prior mortgage is not attacked or sought to be postponed to the subsequent mortgage, the prior mortgagee is outside the controversy of the suit, and he is entitled to bring a suit for sale on his own mortgage even though he may not have appeared in the suit that was brought by the subsequent mortgagee. As regards a subsequent mortgagee, the rule is that if he is made a party to a suit on a mortgage prior to his own, he ought to claim his right to redeem the prior mortgage, and if he omits to do so, he cannot afterwards sue for redemption of the mortgage he omitted to plead in that suit (u)

In this connection we may mention a point which was left open by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Srs Gopal v. Parithi Singh (v) cited above, namely, whether a mortgagee who has several mortgages on the same property can treat them as separate causes of action, or whether he must bring one suit on all of them. This point arose in a recent case before the High Court of Bombay, where it was held that if a mortgagee who has two mortgages upon the same property sues upon the mortgage of the later date, and the property is sold without reference to the prior mortgage, he cannot afterwards sue on the prior mortgage, not because the several mortgages constitute but one cause of action within the meaning O 2, r 2 but because of the general principles of the law of mortgage and of res judicata (w). Similarly it has been held by the High Court of Madras that if the mortgagee brings a suit on the prior mortgage without mentioning his subsequent mortgage, and the property is sold, he cannot afterwards sue to enforce the subsequent mortgage against the property (x). The contrary has been held by the High Court of Calcutta (y). The ground of the Bombay and Madras decisions seems to be that the mortgagee in such a case must be deemed to be a party to the first suit as a prior or subsequent mortgagee according as the first suit is on the subsequent or prior mortgage, and that the case therefore is similar to the one where the prior or subsequent mortgagee being joined as a party does not set up his claim under the mortgage. But where a mortgagee who has two mortgages upon the same property

sues on the mortgage of the later date reserving his rights under the prior mortgage, and the property is put to sale subject to the prior mortgage, there is nothing to preclude him from subsequently suing upon the prior mortgage (c)

In suits for redemption, foreclosure or sale, there ought to be a complete and final settlement of all accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee right up to the time of actual redemption, foreclosure or sale, as the case may be (a) A mortgagor, therefore, who has obtained a decree for redemption against a mortgagee in possession, and paid what was due according to the decree, and obtained possession, cannot subsequently sue for profits realized by the mortgagee for a period prior to the delivery of possession. Such profits "might and ought" to have been taken into account at the time of passing the decree (b) Similarly, where a suit is brought by a mortgagor under s 52 of the Transfer of Property Act to recover possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgage being a usufructuary one, and a deposit is made by him in Court under s 53 of the Act of the amount due to the mortgagee, and a decree is passed for possession, the mortgagor cannot subsequently sue for profits realized by the mortgagee from the date of the deposit to the date of the delivery of possession (c) In both these cases, it may be said that there was but one cause of action, and the subsequent suit was therefore barred by the provisions of O 2, r 2 [Code of 1882, s 43]

See notes, "Finality of decree in redemption suits," on p 64 below

Subject-matter of suit—It is not necessary for Explanation IV to be applicable that both the issue and the subject matter of the two suits must be the same. It is enough if the matters in issue are the same, otherwise in suits for arrears of rent there could be no res judicata at all, for the subject matters of successive suits for arrears of rent are necessarily different (d). See notes on p 33 above

Issue of law.—Issues are of three kinds: (1) issues of fact, (2) issues of law, and (3) mixed issues of law and fact. An issue of fact may be res judicata. Note the opening words of the section, "No Court shall try any suit or issue." An issue of mixed law and fact stands on the same footing as an issue of fact, and it may also be res judicata (e)

An issue of law, it has been held, may or may not be res judicata. It is res judicata if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is the same as that in the former suit, as was the case in the undermentioned cases (f). But it cannot be res judicata if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit, as was the case in the undermentioned cases (g). Cases of recurring liability, such as rent, maintenance, etc. belong to the latter class in the suit, and it is an issue of law, namely, whether a person who is not in possession of property at the time of sale is competent to convey it. The issue is found in the negative and A's suit is accordingly dismissed. It is subsequently decided by a Full Bench of the same High Court in another case between different parties altogether that although a person may not have property in his possession, he is nevertheless competent to convey it. After the decision of the Full Bench, A again sues B to recover possession of the same property under the same deed of sale, and asks for a decision in his favour on the strength of the Full Bench ruling on the point of law that was decided against him in the former suit. Here the cause of action in the subsequent suit is the same as that in the former suit. The Court is therefore precluded from re-trying the same question of law in the subsequent suit, in other words, the issue of law is res judicata. It is immaterial that the decision on the question of law in the first suit was erroneous. Courts Koer v. Audh Koer (1884) 10 Cal 1087, Ramlal v. Deodharai Ras (1923) 2 Pat 771, 74 I C 781, (21) A. P. 265. See as to the case in 10 Cal 1087, the observations of Maclean, C. J., in Alimunnissa v. Shama Charan (1903) 32 Cal 749 in 10 Cal 1097.

2. A sues B in the year 1894 to recover 12 years' arrears of his share of a certain Government allowance received by B. B contends that A is not entitled to recover more than 3 years' allowance, having regard to the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act. The Court decrees the whole of A's claim. In the year 1907 A sues B for further arrears for 12 years from the year 1895 to the year 1900. B raises the same point of law that was raised by him in the former suit. Here the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit, for the claim in the subsequent suit is for further arrears that had accrued due after the institution of the former suit. The Court, therefore, is not precluded from re-trying the same question of law, and if it finds that the question of law was wrongly decided in the former suit, it may decide the suit on what it considers is the correct interpretation of the law. Chamanlal v. Dapubhas (1898) 22 Bom 669.

3. The point of limitation again will not be res judicata if in the case put in ill. (2) the view of the law on which the decision in the first suit was based was subsequently disapproved by a higher tribunal. The cause of action being different the second suit must be decided upon the law as it stands when the judgment in that suit is pronounced. Alimunnissa v. Shama Charan (1903) 32 Cal 749.

It will be observed that in the case cited in ill. (2) the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit was also directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, and the other conditions of res judicata were also present, and yet it was held that the subsequent suit was not barred as res judicata. The effect of this and other cases cited in foot note (g) on p. 47 appears to be that where the matter directly and substantially in issue is a matter of law, it may not be res judicata, if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit (h). The reason given is that the Courts would be perpetuating an injustice for all time if they were to hold that an erroneous decision on a point of law in a former suit was binding upon the parties in a subsequent suit instituted upon a fresh cause of action. It must, however, be recognized, as stated by Wookerjee, J., in Aghore Nath v. Kamini Devi (i), that the effect of this is to substitute in the present section the phrase "cause of action" for "the matter in issue". In Vankata v. Andavola (j), Napier, J., took the extreme view that where a decision on a point of law, whether it be on the construction of a document or of a statute or on common law or on customary law once settles a question that arises directly out of conflicting views as to the rights of the parties, it is res judicata. A similar opinion was expressed by Shah, J., and Fawcett, J., in Sitaram v. Laxman (k), (h) See Alimunnissa v. Shama Charan (1903) 32 Cal 749 754.

(i) (1910) 11 Cal L. J. 461, 471, 61 C 534.

and by Das J, in Ramlal v. Doodhni Pat (l) To get over the difficulties that arise from this extreme view, some judges have suggested a distinction between a decision on an abstract question of law, such as a question of limitation, and a decision on a concrete question, such as the construction of a document entered into between the parties to a suit, the latter question being treated as one to which the rule of res judicata applied, and the former as one to which the principle of stare decisis applied (m) As to stare decisis it is to be noted that the principle cannot be invoked when the terms of a statute are clear In Tricomdas v. Gopinath (n) their Lordships of the Privy Council said "When the terms of a statute or ordinance are clear their Lordships have decided that even a long and uniform course of judicial interpretation of it may be overruled, if it is contrary to the meaning of the enactment" Pate v. Pate (o) In Pate v. Pate, their Lordships overruled a decision of the Supreme Court of Ceylon which had followed a current of decisions for forty four years

CONDITION II : EXPLANATION VI HEREIN

The former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim

Same parties.—A sues B for rent The defence is that C, and not A, is the landlord A fails to prove his title, and the suit is dismissed A then sues B and C for a declaration of his title to the property The suit is not barred, for the parties to the two suits are not the same, C not having been a party to the former suit (p)

Res judicata as between co-defendants—is a matter may be res judicata between a plaintiff and a defendant, so it may be res judicata as between co plaintiffs or as between co defendants First, as to res judicata between co defendants if in a suit by A against B and C, there is a matter directly and substantially in issue between B and C, and an adjudication upon that matter is necessary to the determination of the suit, the adjudication may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between B and C in which either of them is plaintiff and the other defendant (q) In other words, if a plaintiff cannot get at his right without trying and deciding a case between co defendants the Court will try and decide the case and the co defendants will be bound But if the relief given to the plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co defendants, the co defendants will not be bound as between each other by any proceeding which may be necessary only to the decree which the plaintiff obtains (r) These are the limits within which the doctrine of res judicata should be applied as between co defendants (s)

A Hindu, H, dies leaving two daughters D1 and D2 and a nephew V D1 sues D2 and V to recover certain property under an oral will of H D2 claims the property under a will in writing executed by H V claims the property as undivided nephew of H The Court finds that H and N were divided that the will in writing is the valid will, and dismisses D1's suit. Subsequently D2 sues N to recover the property under the written will. A contends that he and H were joint, and that he became entitled to the property by right of survivorship. The question whether H and A were joint is res judicata. That question was directly and substantially in issue in the first suit, and it was necessary to decide it in that suit to adjudicate upon D1's claim, and it was decided against A. (t) Another type of cases in which a question between co-defendants may become res judicata is where a suit is brought against two or more defendants, and a will has to be construed by the Court to adjudicate upon the plaintiff's claim which is founded on the will. In such cases the decision with regard to the construction of the will on the rival contentions of the defendants may be res judicata in a subsequent suit by some or one of them against the rest (u).

Res judicata as between co-plaintiffs—Next, as to res judicata between co-plaintiffs. As a matter may be res judicata between co-defendants, so it may be res judicata between co-plaintiffs, subject to the same conditions that apply to the case of co-defendants (v).

Parties in subsequent suit claiming under parties in former suit.—If the first suit is between A and B, and the second between A and C, the decision in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the second unless C claims under B. If C does not claim under B, he cannot be bound by any decision in a suit between A and B. The dismissal, therefore, of an ejectment suit brought by a lessee against a trespasser is no bar to a subsequent suit for ejectment by the lessor against the same person, for a lessor cannot be said to claim under his lessee (w).

If the first suit is between A and B, and the second between C and D, the decision in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the second unless C claims either under A or B, and D claims under the other of them; that is to say, if C claims under A, D must be claiming under B, and if C claims under B, D must be claiming under A. It is clear that if both C and D claim under A alone, nothing that is decided in the suit between A and B will operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit between C and D, for neither of them claims under B. The result is the same if both C and D claim under B alone. In other words, the plea of res judicata cannot prevail if all the parties in the subsequent suit claim under one party only in the former suit (x).

The Official Assignee represents the whole body of creditors. But he may for certain purposes represent the insolvent. It is only in the latter case that the Official Assignee can be said to claim under the insolvent and to litigate under the same title. A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree a house standing in B's name is attached. C, B's brother, claims the property as his own, but his claim is rejected by the executing Court. Subsequently B is adjudicated an insolvent, and his estate vests in the Official Assignee. The Official Assignee advertises the house for sale. C sues the Official Assignee for a declaration that the house belongs to him and for an injunction restraining him from selling the house. The decision in the execution proceedings is not res judicata against C. The Official Assignee in C's suit represents B's creditors, and not B, and he cannot be said to be claiming under B (y).

A purchaser at a revenue sale does not "claim under" the defaulting proprietor; therefore a decree against the defaulting proprietor cannot constitute res judicata against the purchaser (z).

A purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree acquires only the right title and interest of the judgment debtor in the land sold. Hence it has been held that an adjudication as to the area of the land in a previous suit between the judgment debtor and his landlord is binding on the auction purchaser (a).

The title by which the parties in the subsequent suit claim must have arisen "subsequently" to the commencement of the former suit—In order that a decision in a suit between A and B may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between A and C, it is necessary to show that C claims under B by a title arising subsequently to the commencement of the first suit. Thus a purchaser, mortgagee, or donee of a property is not estopped by a decree obtained in a suit against the vendor, mortgagor or donor commenced after the date of the purchase, mortgage or gift (b).

See notes below under the head "Condition III Litigating under the same title"

Representative suit—Explanation VI.—This section deals with representative suits, that is, suits instituted by or against a person in his representative, as distinguished from individual character. Suits brought or defended by one or more persons on behalf of themselves and others with the leave of the Court under O 1, r 8, are common instances of this type. Explanation VI provides that where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a public right or a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to "claim under" the person so litigating. It refers to cases in which a decision in a suit may operate as res judicata against persons not expressly named as parties to the suit, as where a suit is instituted by A and B on behalf of themselves "and others", or where it is instituted against A and B on behalf of themselves "and others". The conditions under which the decision in such a suit may constitute res judicata against the parties not expressly named in the suit are—

- (1) that there must be a right claimed by one or more persons in common for themselves and others not expressly named in the suit, and
- (2) that the parties not expressly named in the suit must be interested in such right (c).

(1) A decree in a suit against certain members of a sect alleged to be wrongdoers in their individual capacity cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit against the other members of the sect. Sailagopa Chariar v Krishnamoorthy Rao (1907) 30 Mad 183, 34 I A 93 [The wrong complained of in the former suit was that the defendants carried an idol in procession through certain streets and that such processions were in violation of the plaintiffs' rights. The suit was against the defendants in their individual capacity, and not as representing the sect to which they belonged.]

(2) A, alleging that he is the proprietor of a village, sues B, C, and D for ejectment. The defence is that A is not the proprietor at all, that a part of the village belongs to B, C and D, and the rest to X, Y and Z. The Court finds that A is not the proprietor, and A's suit is dismissed. A then sues X, Y and Z, and also B, C and D, for a declaration, that he is the proprietor of the village and for possession. The question of A's title to the village is res judicata so as to bar the suit against B, C and D, who were parties to the former suit, but it is not res judicata so as to bar the suit against X, Y and Z who were not parties to the former suit. It cannot be said that B, C and D litigated in the former suit in respect of a private right claimed in common for themselves and X, Y and Z, for what B, C and D did in the former suit was that they set up their own right to a part of the property and alleged that another part belonged to X, Y and Z Jaimangal Deo v Bed Saran (1911) 33 All 493, 9 I C, 819

(3) A and B two of the members of the Malomedan community bring a suit against C for a declaration that a certain mosque and a garden appertaining to the mosque are wakf property. The plaintiffs fail to prove that the property is wakf property, and the suit is dismissed. The suit is barred as res judicata. Muhammad v Sumitra (1914) 36 All 424 24 I C 97

The right referred to in this Explanation may either be a public right or a private right. The words "public right" have been added into this Explanation in view of the provisions of s 91 below. The right to have a public nuisance abated is a public right. But the right of pasturage claimed by custom by the inhabitants of a village over a tract of land or to take water from a spring or well, is a private right (d).

In some of the cases that arose under the Code of 1852 the opinion was expressed that the present Explanation, so far as it relates to private rights must be confined to cases where leave to sue has been obtained under s 30 of that Code [now O 1 s 8 (1)] (e). But the Explanation, it is submitted, is not confined to such cases and applies also where no such leave is obtained (f). Suits by a Hindu widow or by a reversioner in her or his representative character are commonest instances of this type.

Shebait, karnaran, trustee, administrator, etc.—If the parties in the subsequent suit can be said to have been represented by the parties in the former suit the decision in the former suit will bind the parties in the subsequent suit. Thus a trustee of a decrasam, a karnam, a holder of tatan lands, an administrator of the estate of a deceased person a shebait, a holder of saranyam lands, represents each his successor therefore a decree against him will bind his successor (g). Similarly a decree against a benamidar binds the real owner (h). On the same principle a decree against the karnaran of a tarwad in his representative capacity binds the members of the tarwad (i).

Hindu widow and reversioners—A decree passed against a Hindu widow as representing the estate of her deceased husband in respect of a debt or other transaction binding on the estate is binding upon the reversioners (j), 'unless' as was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Sriraganga case, 'it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the right on that suit—or in other words, unless that decree could have been successfully impeached on some special ground (k). The reason of this qualification is that though a Hindu widow represents the estate of the reversioners for some purposes, it is her duty not only to represent the estate, but also to protect it (l).

The observations of their Lordships in the Shuaganga case were construed to mean in a large majority of cases that a decree passed against a Hindu widow or other limited heir did not bind the reversioners unless the decree was passed in a suit contested to the end, and that neither a consent decree nor a decree on an award, however bona fide the compromise or reference might be, bound the reversioners. But this view has now been definitely rejected by the Privy Council as it involves very extreme consequences, one of them being that a Hindu widow must fight the case up to the Privy Council, and another that her opponent can never suggest a compromise, because he would know that any compromise would be upset. It has accordingly been held that a widow has power to compromise a suit, and a decree passed against her, though on a compromise or on an award, binds the reversioners as much as a decree in a suit contested to the end, provided the compromise was entered into by her bona fide for the benefit of the estate which she represents and not for her personal advantage (m). But a decree passed against a Hindu widow not in her representative but personal character, does not bind the reversioners (n). Similarly a decree passed against the legal personal representative of a Hindu widow in respect of her husband's estate cannot bind a reversioner, for the representative of a widow does not represent the estate of the husband (o).

There is no authority for the proposition that a Hindu widow, otherwise qualified to represent an estate in litigation, ceases to be so qualified merely owing to personal disability or disadvantage as a litigant, although the merits of a suit by or against her are tried and the trial is fair and honest. The mere fact, therefore, that she is personally estopped from denying the material facts of the case is no ground for withholding the application of the rule enunciated at the commencement of this paragraph, namely, that where the estate of a deceased Hindu has vested in his widow or other limited heir, a decree fairly and properly obtained against her, after a trial upon the merits, is binding on the reversionary heirs. Thus where a Hindu widow instituted a suit for a declaration that an adoption made by her to her deceased husband was invalid, and the suit was dismissed on the ground that the widow was estopped by her conduct from denying the validity of the adoption, and it was further found upon the facts that the adoption was valid, it was held in a suit brought by the reversionary heir after the widow's death for a declaration that the adoption was invalid, that the reversionary heir was bound by the decision in the first suit as res judicata (p).

The dismissal of a suit brought by a widow on the ground that it was barred by the provisions of s. 47 below, does not operate as res judicata so as to bar a subsequent suit by the reversioners (q). A reversioner is entitled to bring a suit for a declaration that an alienation made by a Hindu widow is not binding on the reversion. Such a suit is a representative suit on behalf of all the reversioners. A decree fairly and properly obtained against the reversioner in such a suit binds not only him, but the whole body of reversioners presumptive and contingent on the one hand and the alienor or his representative on the other (r).

II

Res judicata in suits under O. 21, r. 63—See notes to O. 21 r. 63, "Res judicata"

Judgment in rem.—It will have been seen from what has preceded that a judgment in a suit is binding only upon the parties to the suit and their privies. "As a general principle, a transaction between two parties in judicial proceedings ought not to be binding upon a third, for it would be unjust to bind any person who could not be admitted to make a defence, or to examine witnesses, or to appeal from a judgment he might think erroneous" (c). There are, however, certain judgments which bind all the world and not only the parties to the proceeding in which they were passed and their privies. A judgment that is binding upon the parties and their privies only is called a judgment in personam. A judgment which binds all the world is called a judgment in rem. Judgments in rem are outside the scope of the present section. They are dealt with in the Indian Evidence Act, s. 41.

Decree against minor.—A decree passed against a minor properly represented is binding upon him to the same extent as a decree passed against an adult, but it is open to the minor to impeach such a decree by a suit in cases where the next friend or guardian for the suit has been guilty of fraud or gross negligence in allowing the decree to be passed against him (d). Any act or omission on the part of the guardian ad litem which in the result has wrought prejudice to the minor's interest is gross negligence (H). An omission on the part of a guardian ad litem to bring to the notice of the Court a previous judgment between the parties for the purpose of raising the plea of res judicata does not constitute negligence (u).

A decree passed against a minor not properly represented is a nullity. But it has been held that if a suit is brought on the minor's behalf to set aside a sale in execution of such decree, but the plea that the minor was not properly represented in the suit in which the decree was passed is not then taken, it cannot be taken in a subsequent suit to set aside the decree and sale by reason of the rule contained in Explanation IV to the section (v).

CONDITION III

"Litigating under the same title"

The third condition of res judicata is that the parties in the subsequent suit must have litigated under the "same title" in the previously decided suit. The expression "same title" means the same capacity. "A verdict against a man suing in one capacity will not stop him when he sues in another distinct capacity, and, in fact, is a different person" (w). Thus where a suit is brought by a person to recover possession from a stranger, of math property claiming it as the heir of a deceased mohunt, but he does not produce any certificate of succession to establish his heirship and the suit is thereupon dismissed, the dismissal is no bar to a suit by him as manager of the math on behalf of the math (x). Similarly the dismissal of a suit brought by a son against his father for maintenance claimed under an agreement is no bar to a suit by him against the father for a declaration that he is entitled to maintenance out of certain lands in the hands of the father held under a sanad from Government whereby, it was alleged, the lands were charged at the time of grant with the maintenance of the junior members of the family (y).

(x) Pabai rao v. Jarmandas (1901) 23 Bom. 1, (1910) 33

A mortgagee in possession, does not lose the character of mortgagee and become a trespasser because he refuses to deliver up possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor on deposit being made by the latter in Court of the amount payable on the mortgage. A executes a usufructuary mortgage of his property to B, and places B in possession thereof. At the proper time A tenders the mortgage debt, Rs 500, to B and asks to be restored to possession. B refuses to accept the tender on the ground that more is due to him and to deliver up possession of the property to A. A sues B for redemption, and deposits Rs 500 in Court. The Court finds that the tender was proper, and directs B to deliver up possession to A. After entering into possession, A sues B to recover mesne profits from B from the date of the deposit in Court to the date of the recovery of possession. The suit is barred, for A "might and ought" to have claimed the mesne profits in the first suit. The suit is between the same parties litigating 'under the same title,' that is, as mortgagor and mortgagee. The mortgage is not extinguished after the tender and deposit, and B does not become a trespasser after that date. It cannot therefore be said that the suit against B for mesne profits is against him as a trespasser, and not as a mortgagee (z).

The words 'between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title' cover a case where the later litigant occupies by succession the same position as the former litigant. There may be a succession by the ordinary rules of inheritance or succession by some very special rules as in the case of Saranjam estates or Vatan estates. The words of the section do not make any distinction between different forms of succession. A decree, therefore, against a Saranjamdar may operate as res judicata against his heir and successor (a), so also a decree against a Vatanadar (b).

CONDITION IV : EXPLANATION II HEREIN

"Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised"

Court of competent jurisdiction—In order that a decision in a former suit may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit, it is necessary that the Court which tried the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit. Mere competency to try the issue raised in the subsequent suit is not enough. As stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Golul Mandar v Pudmanund (c) "a decree in a previous suit cannot be pleaded as res judicata in a subsequent suit unless the judge by whom it was made had jurisdiction to try and decide, not only the particular matter in issue, but also the subsequent suit itself in which the issue is subsequently raised. In this respect the enactment goes beyond s 13 of the previous Act 10 of 1877, and also, as appears to their Lordships, beyond the law laid down by the judges in the Duchess of Kingston's case' (d). The words in s 13 of the Code of 1877 were, "No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction, in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom," etc. Sec 2 of the Code of 1859 was in similar terms. In s 13 of the Code of 1882, the words "Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised," which also occur in the present section, were substituted for the words, "Court of competent jurisdiction," clearly restricting the operation of the principle of res judicata.

The Court which decided the former suit may be a Court of "exclusive" jurisdiction, or a Court of "concurrent" jurisdiction, or a Court of "limited" jurisdiction

If here the Court which decided the former suit is a Court of "exclusive" jurisdiction— If a matter directly and substantially in issue in a former suit has been adjudicated upon by a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, the adjudication will bar the trial of the same matter in a subsequent suit. Thus Courts of Revenue have jurisdiction in respect of certain matters to the entire exclusion of Civil Courts, and the decision of a Revenue Court on such matter cannot be questioned in a civil Court (c)

*If here the Court which decided the former suit was not a Court of jurisdiction concurrent with that of the Court in which the subsequent suit is brought—*In such a case the Court which decided the former suit cannot be a Court 'competent to try the subsequent suit' within the meaning of this section (f)

Where the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of concurrent jurisdiction— In such a case the Court which decided the former suit may or may not have been "competent to try the subsequent suit" If it was, the decision would operate as res judicata, but not otherwise

Summarising the above, we may say that in order that a decision in a former suit may operate as res judicata, the Court which decided that suit must have been either—

1. a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, or
2. a Court of concurrent jurisdiction "competent to try the subsequent suit."

The following are the principal rules as to concurrent jurisdiction:—

(1) *The jurisdiction of the two Courts must be concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit as well as the subject matter (g). First, as to pecuniary limit—*The jurisdiction of the Court which decided the former suit, and that of the Court in which the subsequent suit is brought, must be concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit. A sues B in Court X to recover interest due on a bond for Rs 12,000. For the defence it is alleged that the amount actually lent by A was Rs 4,000, and that A was not entitled to interest on more than Rs 4,000. The Court finds that the amount actually lent was Rs 4,000, and awards A interest on that sum only. Court X is a Court of which the jurisdiction is limited to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 5,000. A then sues B in a High Court to recover the principal sum of Rs 12,000, alleging that that was the actual amount lent by him to B. B contends that the actual amount advanced was Rs 4,000, and that the question as to whether Rs 12,000 was lent or Rs 4,000 is res judicata. The question is not res judicata, for the jurisdiction of Court X being limited to Rs 5,000, it was not a Court competent to try the subsequent suit in which the amount claimed is Rs 12,000. The point to be noted is that the first Court must have been a court competent to try and decide not only the particular matter in issue, but also the subsequent suit in which the same is subsequently raised (h). It must, however, be noted that the Courts will not countenance what is but a mere device to evade the provisions* of this section. Thus where A brought two suits in a Provincial Small Cause Court for compensation in each suit for loss of one packet, and the suits were dismissed, and he subsequently brought a suit in the Munsif's Court, joining together the claims in the respect of both the parcels so as to bring the valuation above the Rs 500 limit, it was

Secondly, as to subject matter—The jurisdiction of the two Courts must be concurrent as regards subject matter. Thus certain Courts have no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title, though that question may be gone into incidentally to decide the principal question. A finding on a question of title by such Courts cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit on title. This generally happens in the following cases—

(a) Where the first Court is a "Probate Court" and the second Court a "Civil Court"—A and B, each claiming to be the heir of X, apply to a High Court, in the exercise of its testamentary jurisdiction, for letters of administration of the estate of X. The Court finds that A is the heir of X, and grants letters to him. B then sues A in the same Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction for a declaration that he, and not A, is the heir of X. The suit is not barred for a Probate Court has no jurisdiction to finally adjudicate upon questions of title (j). It must not, however, be supposed that a decision of a Probate Court can in no case operate as res judicata in any subsequent proceeding in a Civil Court. Thus if A, alleging to be the executor of B's will, applies for probate of the will, and C, B's widow, opposes the application, and probate is refused on the ground that the will is not proved, A will be precluded, in a subsequent suit by C against him to recover her husband's property from him from contending that he is the husband's executor and is entitled as such to retain possession of the property. Though the judgment of the Probate Court refusing probate to A does not operate in such a case as a judgment in rem, it operates as res judicata between A and C under s 83 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) and s 11 of the Code (4). Similarly a decision of the Probate Court that the testator executed the will in question as a free agent and not under undue influence precludes the party against whom the decision is given from reopening it in a suit in a Civil Court (f). Likewise a finding in a proceeding for letters of administration that one of the two rival claimants is not the legitimate daughter of the deceased is res judicata in a subsequent suit by her that she was the legitimate daughter and as such his rightful heir (m). As to cases governed by the Succession Certificate Act 7 of 1889 see s 25 of the Act and the undermentioned case (n). See also Indian Evidence Act s 41.

(b) Where the first Court is a "Munsiff's Court" and the second Court a "District Court"—A sues B for rent in a Munsiff's Court. The defence is that C and not A is the landlord. The Court finds that A is not the landlord and the suit is dismissed. A then sues B in a District Court for a declaration of title to the land. The suit is not barred, for a Munsiff's Court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title (o).

Similarly a decision in a suit for damages instituted in a Provincial Small Cause Court [a Court not competent to try a suit on title] does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for establishment of title (p). A decision in a suit for rent in a Provincial Small Cause Court [a Court not competent to try a suit for possession] does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for possession (q).

Explanation II—This explanation is new. Under the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Courts of Bombay (k) and Madras (i) that a decision in a suit in which no second appeal was allowed by law could not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit in which such appeal was allowed. Hence it was held that a decision in a suit of the nature cognizable in Provincial Courts of Small Causes could not operate as res judicata where the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit did not exceed Rs. 500, as no second appeal could lie in such suit. (See s. 546 of the Code of 1882, now s. 102.) On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that a decision in a suit could operate as res judicata, notwithstanding that no second appeal was allowed by law in that suit (j). Explanation II is intended to affirm the view taken by the High Court of Calcutta that the competence of the jurisdiction of a Court does not depend on the right of appeal from its decision (l).

Judgment of Court not competent to deliver it.—A judgment delivered by a Court not competent to deliver it cannot operate as res judicata [Evidence Act, 1872, s. 44]. For this purpose there is no distinction so far as Chartered High Courts are concerned, between cases where a Court has no jurisdiction at all to try a suit and cases where it cannot exercise jurisdiction unless leave to sue has been obtained under cl. 12 of the Charter. Therefore, a judgment delivered by a Chartered High Court in a suit which it has no jurisdiction to try unless leave to sue has been obtained cannot operate as res judicata if leave to sue was not obtained (f).

Judgment obtained by fraud or collusion.—A judgment obtained by fraud or collusion (m) cannot operate as res judicata [Evidence Act, 1872 s. 44]. "Fraud is an extrinsic collateral act, which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of Justice. Lord Coke says, it avoids all judicial acts, ecclesiastical or temporal" (n). Where a decree is impeached on the ground of fraud, the fraud alleged must be actual positive fraud, a meditated and intentional contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts of the case, and the obtaining of the decree by that contrivance. The mere fact that a decree has been obtained by perjured and false evidence is no ground for setting it aside on the ground of fraud (o).

Summary of the above.—The rules of res judicata hitherto considered may be best summarized by citing the following passage from the judgment in the Duchess of Kingston's Case:

"From the variety of cases relative to judgments being given in evidence in civil suits, these two deductions seem to follow as generally true first, that the judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is as a plea, a bar, or as evidence conclusive, between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another Court, secondly that the judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another Court, for a different purpose

Secondly, as to subject matter—The jurisdiction of the two Courts must be concurrent as regards subject matter. Thus certain Courts have no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title, though that question may be gone into incidentally to decide the principal question. A finding on a question of title by such Courts cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit on title. This generally happens in the following cases—

(a) Where the first Court is a "Probate Court" and the second Court a "Civil Court"—A and B, each claiming to be the heir of A, apply to a High Court, in the exercise of its testamentary jurisdiction, for letters of administration of the estate of A. The Court finds that A is the heir of A, and grants letters to him. B then sues A in the same Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction for a declaration that he, and not A, is the heir of A. The suit is not barred for a Probate Court has no jurisdiction to finally adjudicate upon questions of title (j). It must not however be supposed that a decision of a Probate Court can in no case operate as res judicata in any subsequent proceeding in a Civil Court. Thus if A, alleging to be the executor of B's will, applies for probate of the will, and C, B's widow, opposes the application and probate is refused on the ground that the will is not proved A will be precluded in a subsequent suit by C against him to recover her husband's property from him from contending that he is the husband's executor and is entitled as such to retain possession of the property. Though the judgment of the Probate Court refusing probate to A does not operate in such a case as a judgment in rem, it operates as res judicata between A and C under s 83 of the Probate and Administration Act (v of 1881) and s 11 of the Code (k). Similarly a decision of the Probate Court that the testator executed the will in question as a free agent and not under undue influence precludes the party against whom the decision is given from reopening it in a suit in a Civil Court (l). Likewise a finding in a proceeding for letters of administration that one of the two rival claimants is not the legitimate daughter of the deceased is res judicata in a subsequent suit by her that she was the legitimate daughter and as such his rightful heir (m). As to cases governed by the Succession Certificate Act 7 of 1889 see s 25 of the Act and the undermentioned case (n). See also Indian Evidence Act s 41.

(b) Where the first Court is a "Munsiff's Court" and the second Court a District Court—A sues B for rent in a Munsiff's Court. The defence is that C and not A is the landlord. The Court finds that A is not the landlord, and the suit is dismissed. A then sues B in a District Court for a declaration of title to the land. The suit is not barred, for a Munsiff's Court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title (o).

Similarly, a decision in a suit for damages instituted in a Provincial Small Cause Court [a Court not competent to try a suit on title] does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for establishment of title (p). A decision in a suit for rent in a Provincial Small Cause Court [a Court not competent to try a suit for possession] does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for possession (q).

(c) Where the first Court is a "Revenue Court" and the second Court is a "Civil Court"—A decision of a Revenue Court on a question of title is no bar to the trial of the same question by the ordinary Civil Courts unless the Revenue Court is empowered by the Legislature to determine questions of title so as to constitute it pro tanto a Civil Court (r). The reason is that Courts of Revenue are generally Courts of jurisdiction limited to adjudicate upon questions of rent, tenure, etc (s). There are, however, some matters of which the decision by a Revenue Court is expressly declared by the Act constituting the Court to have the force of a decree in a civil suit (t), and some as to which it is declared that the decision shall be final (u). In such cases, the decision of a Revenue Court will operate as res judicata so as to bar the trial of the same matter in a Civil Court. See notes "Where the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of exclusive jurisdiction" on p 56 above. For other cases see foot note (t).

(2) Where the first Court is a "Criminal Court" and the second Court is a "Civil Court"—Criminal proceedings are not a "suit," hence no finding of a Criminal Court can be res judicata in a subsequent suit. It has thus held that a conviction or an acquittal in a criminal case is not conclusive in a civil suit for damages in respect of the act charged against the accused (w). The finding, therefore, of a Criminal Court that A assaulted or abducted B, is not res judicata in a suit for damages against A for assault or abduction (x).

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the judgment of a Civil Court may in a proper case be admissible in evidence in a criminal proceeding between the same parties. Thus where A charged B with criminal breach of trust in respect of certain items, and it appeared that all those items had been dealt with by the Civil Court and the contentions of the accused with reference to all of them had been found to be correct by that Court, it was held that the judgment of the Civil Court was admissible in evidence in the criminal proceeding against the accused (y).

(3) To determine whether the Court which decided the former suit had jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit, regard must be had to the jurisdiction of that Court at the date of the "former" suit, and not to its jurisdiction at the date of the "subsequent" suit (z)—The leading case on the subject is Gopi Nath v Bhugwat (a). In that case a suit was brought in the year 1860 to recover certain property of which the value at that time was less than Rs 1,000 and therefore the proper Court to try it was that of the Munsiff. A second suit was afterwards brought in the year 1880 between the same parties in the Court of the Subordinate Judge to recover the same property which had then risen in value and become worth more than Rs 1,000. The matter directly and substantially in issue in both the suits was the same and the question arose whether the decision of the Munsiff in the first suit operated as res judicata in the second suit. It was contended that as the Munsiff could not have tried the second suit in consequence of the value of the property being more than Rs 1,000, his decision could not have the effect of res judicata. But it was held that the decision operated as res judicata, for if the second suit were instituted in the year 1860, that is, at the time when the first suit was brought, the Munsiff's Court would have been quite competent to try it. Mitter J said "The reasonable construction of the words 'in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit' seems to us to be that it must refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the first suit was brought that is to say, if the Court which tried the first suit was competent to try the subsequent suit, if then brought, the decision of such Court would be conclusive under s 13 [of the Code of 1882], although on a subsequent date by a rise in the value of such property or from any other cause the said Court ceased to be a proper Court, so far as pecuniary jurisdiction is concerned, to take cognizance of a suit relating to that property." The High Court of Madras has also held the same way (b). But it has been held by the latter Court that the augmentation of a pecuniary claim by accrual of interest is not similar to a rise in the market value of a property, and that though in the latter case the decision in the prior suit may operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit, it cannot in the former case (c).

(4) It is the competency of the original Court which decided the former "suit" that must be looked to, and not that of the appellate Court in which that suit was ultimately decided on appeal (d) or of the executing Court (e)—A suit is instituted in a Munsiff's Court. An appeal from the decree in that suit is preferred to a District Court. A subsequent suit relating to the same matter in issue is brought also in a District Court. The decision in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit, for though the District Court that heard the appeal may have jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit, the Munsiff's Court, that is the Court which decided the former suit, is not a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit.

(5) A Court does not cease to be a "Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit," if its inability to entertain it arises not from incompetence, but from the existence of another Court with a preferential jurisdiction (f)—Thus a finding by a Munsif in a suit for possession under s 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, instituted in his Court that the plaintiff was wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant is res judicata on the issue as to wrongful dispossession in a subsequent suit brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant for damages for wrongful dispossession in a Court of Small Causes. It cannot be said that the Munsif who tried the first suit was not competent to try the subsequent suit for damages.

(6) A decision on a matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit tried by a Revenue Court may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit brought in the same Court, though the character of the suits may be such that in the one case an appeal lies to the Commissioner, and in the other to a District Court.—The fact that in the two suits appeals may lie to different Courts does not affect the application of the rule of res judicata (g).

Explanation II.—This explanation is new. Under the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Courts of Bombay (h) and Madras (i) that a decision in a suit in which no second appeal was allowed by law could not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit in which such appeal was allowed. Hence it was held that a decision in a suit of the nature cognizable in Provincial Courts of Small Causes could not operate as res judicata where the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit did not exceed Rs 500, as no second appeal could lie in such suit (See s 546 of the Code of 1882, now s 102). On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that a decision in a suit could operate as res judicata, notwithstanding that no second appeal was allowed by law in that suit (j). Explanation II is intended to affirm the view taken by the High Court of Calcutta that the competence of the jurisdiction of a Court does not depend on the right of appeal from its decision (l).

Judgment of Court not competent to deliver it.—A judgment delivered by a Court not competent to deliver it cannot operate as res judicata [Evidence Act, 1872, s 44]. For this purpose there is no distinction, so far as Chartered High Courts are concerned, between cases where a Court has no jurisdiction at all to try a suit and cases where it cannot exercise jurisdiction unless leave to sue has been obtained under cl 12 of the Charter. Therefore, a judgment delivered by a Chartered High Court in a suit which it has no jurisdiction to try unless leave to sue has been obtained cannot operate as res judicata if leave to sue was not obtained (l).

Judgment obtained by fraud or collusion.—A judgment obtained by fraud or collusion (m) cannot operate as res judicata [Evidence Act, 1872, s 44]. "Fraud is an extrinsic collateral act, which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of Justice. Lord Coke says, it avoids all judicial acts, ecclesiastical or temporal" (n). But neither the judgment of a Court of concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment "

CONDITION V : EXPLANATION V HEREIN.

The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must have been "heard and finally decided" by the Court in the first suit

Heard and finally decided.—The mere fact that a matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit is not sufficient to constitute the matter res judicata. It is further necessary, amongst other conditions, that the matter must have been "heard and finally decided" in the former suit. This does not mean that there should be an actual finding on the issue in question, it is enough if the decree necessarily involves a finding of the issue (p). It has thus been held that an issue may be res judicata where the judgment of the appellate Court shows that the issue was treated as material, and was decided, although the decree passed merely affirms the decree of the lower Court which did not deal with the issue (q).

In dealing with questions under the present head it is important to note—

- (1) that if a decree is specific, and is at variance with a statement in the judgment, regard must be had to the decree, and not to the statement in the judgment (r),
- (2) that neither an obiter dictum nor a mere expression of opinion in a judgment has the effect of res judicata (s),
- (3) that when a Court merely for the purpose of preventing a remand records its finding on an issue not necessary for the decision of the case, it does not operate as res judicata (t).

See notes "Examination of pleadings and judgment", on p 32 above

A matter will be said to have been heard and finally decided, notwithstanding that the former suit was disposed of—

- (i) ex parte (u), or
- (ii) by dismissal under O 17, r 3 [Code of 1892, s 153] (v), or
- (iii) by a decree on an award (w), or
- (iv) by oath tendered under s 8 of the Indian Oaths Act, 1873 (x)

If the plaintiff fails to adduce evidence at the hearing, and the suit is dismissed, it is none the less 'heard and finally decided' (y)

The decision in the former suit must have been one on the merits.—In order that a matter may be said to have been heard and finally decided, the decision

- (i) for want of jurisdiction (z), or
- (ii) for default of plaintiff's appearance under O 9, r 8 (a); [but a fresh suit on the same cause of action may be barred under O 9, r 9]; or
- (iii) on the ground of nonjoinder of parties (b), or misjoinder of parties (c), or multifariousness (d), or on the ground that the suit was badly framed (e), or on the ground of a technical mistake (f), or
- (iv) for failure on the part of the plaintiff to produce probate or letters of administration or succession certificate when the same is required by law to entitle the plaintiff to a decree (g), or
- (v) for failure to furnish security for costs under O 25, r 2 [Code of 1882, s. 351] (h), or
- (vi) on the ground of improper valuation (i), or for failure to pay additional court fees on a plaint which was under valued (j).

See notes "Liberty to bring a fresh suit," on p. 66 below

The decision in the former suit must have been necessary to the determination of that suit.—A matter directly and substantially in issue cannot be said to have been "heard and finally decided," unless the finding on the issue was necessary to the determination of the suit. A finding on an issue cannot be said to be necessary to the decision of a suit unless the decision was based upon that finding. And a decision cannot be said to have been based upon a finding unless an appeal can lie against that finding. The reason is that "everything that should have the authority of res judicata is, and ought to be, subject to appeal, and reciprocally an appeal is not admissible on any point not having the authority of res judicata" (k). This leads to the following rules—

RULE I—If the plaintiff's suit is wholly dismissed, no issue decided against the defendant can operate as res judicata against him in a subsequent suit, for the defendant cannot appeal from a finding on any such issue, the decree being wholly in his favour (l) [see ill (1) and (3)]; but every issue decided against the plaintiff may operate as res judicata against him in a subsequent suit, for the plaintiff can appeal from a finding on such issue, the decree being against him (m) [see ill (3)]. The Allahabad High Court has expressed the opinion that the second branch of this rule does not apply to cases where the Court after disposing of the suit against the plaintiff on a preliminary point proceeds to

(1) In a suit by A against B for ejectment B contends (1) that no notice to quit was given, and (2) that the land being majhes land he is not liable to be evicted at all. The suit is dismissed on a finding that no notice to quit was given. The Court, however, also finds that the land is not majhes land, but this finding is not recorded in the decree. A then sues B to evict him from the land after giving notice to B. B contends that the land is majhes land and that he is not liable to be evicted. Does the finding in the first suit that the land was not majhes land operate as res judicata so as to preclude B from raising the same contention in the subsequent suit? No, for A's suit having been dismissed, B could not have appealed from the finding that the land was not majhes land. The Court having found in the first suit that A had not given notice to quit it was not necessary to the determination of the suit whether the land was majhes land or not. The decree against A in the first suit was not based upon the finding that the land was not majhes land. On the other hand, it was made in spite of that finding. Thakur Magundro v Thakur Mahadeo (1891) 18 Cal 647, Lundo v Bidhoo (1886) 13 Cal 17.

Suppose that in the case put above B had not raised the defence that the land was majhes land in the first suit. Would he be precluded from raising that defence in the second suit on the ground that he might and ought to have raised that defence in the first suit? No, the reason being that when a point of defence that has been actually raised and disallowed cannot operate as res judicata against a defendant it certainly cannot operate as such when it has not been raised in fact, though it might and ought to have been raised (o).

(2) A sues B for possession of certain lands after the expiry of a lease granted by him to B. B pleads (1) an occupancy right, and (2) that the suit is premature as he [B] had a right of renewal. The trial judge finds that there was no occupancy right but that the suit was premature and the suit is dismissed. A files an appeal to the High Court. B files a cross objection to the finding against him namely that he had no occupancy right. The High Court affirms the decree on the ground that the suit was premature and upon the cross objection affirms the finding that B had no occupancy right. After some years A after giving notice to B again sues B for possession. B again pleads an occupancy right. A contends that the finding of the High Court in the previous suit that B had no occupancy right is res judicata. Held by the Judicial Committee that the finding is not res judicata, the reason being that B having succeeded on the plea that the suit was premature had no occasion to go further as to the finding against him. Midnapur Zamindari Co Ltd v Naresk Narayan Roy (1921) 48 I A 49 48 Cal 660, 65 I C 833. The decision to the contrary in Mota v Vithal (p) is not good law.

(3) In a suit by A against B for damages for not removing certain offensive matter from A's land B contends (1) that no notice was given as required by the Bengal Municipal Act, and (2) that he was not bound to remove the filth from A's land. The suit is dismissed upon two grounds. (1) want of notice under the Act. (2) that B was not bound to remove the filth. A then sues B for damages for non removal of the filth over a subsequent period after giving notice to B. B contends that he is not liable to remove the filth, and that the question of his liability is res judicata by reason of its having been decided against A in the first suit. A contends that the question is not res judicata for

11. the Court having decided in the former suit that the suit must fail for want of notice, it was not necessary for the Court to decide the issue as to B's liability to remove the filth. Held by the Calcutta High Court that the question is res judicata, and A cannot raise it again in the second suit. Peary v Ambica (1897) 24 Cal. 900. The Allahabad High Court would seem to be of a different opinion. Shib Charan v Raghu (1895) 17 All. 174, 193. The latter view, it is submitted is correct.

RULE II—If the plaintiff's suit is decreed in its entirety, no issue decided against the plaintiff can be res judicata, for the plaintiff cannot appeal from a finding on any such issue, the decree being wholly in his favour, but every issue decided against the defendant is res judicata, for the defendant can appeal from a finding on such issue, the decree being against him.

A, alleging that he is the adopted son of X, sues B to recover certain property granted to him by X under a deed and forming part of the estate of X. The Court finds that A is not the adopted son of X, but that he is entitled to the property under the deed and a decree is passed for A. The finding that A is not the adopted son of X will not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between A and B in which the question of adoption is again put in issue, for the decree being in favour of A, A could not have appealed from that finding. The Court having found that A was entitled to the property under the deed, the finding on the question of adoption was not necessary to the determination of the suit. The decree, far from being based on the finding as to adoption, was made "in spite of it." Rango v Mudiyeppa (1899) 23 Bom. 206.

"Finality" of decree in redemption suits.—The question that arises under this head is whether a mortgagor, who has brought a suit for redemption and obtained a decree nisi under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, 1892, which neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee has applied to be made absolute, can after execution of the decree in time barred, bring a fresh suit for redemption, or whether such suit is barred by s. 11 or s. 47 of the Code. The High Court of Allahabad has held that if the decree does not expressly contain an order for foreclosure or extinction of the mortgagor's equity of redemption on default of payment within the prescribed time the mortgagor may bring a second suit for redemption, but not if the decree does contain such an order (q). A similar view has been taken by the High Courts of Bombay (r) and Lahore (s). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that a second suit for redemption will be barred even if the decree does not contain an order for foreclosure on default of payment. Hence it has been held by that Court that a decree nisi for redemption which provides that on default of payment the mortgaged property should be sold is a bar to a second suit, though no final order for sale was applied for by the mortgagee (t). The ground of the Allahabad, Bombay and Lahore decisions is that a mortgagor has an unfettered right to redeem unless that right has been extinguished by act of the parties or by an order of the Court. The High Court of Madras, while conceding that the right to redeem is not extinguished, says that the suit for redemption is barred under this section, the matter in issue in both the suits being the same According to the Bombay rulings, the matter in issue in the two suits is not the same. The High Court of Calcutta has held the same way as the Madras High Court (u)

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that where a mortgagee obtains a preliminary decree for sale, but does not apply for an order absolute for sale within the period prescribed by the decree, nor is any step taken by the mortgagor to redeem the property, the mortgagor is not precluded from bringing a suit for redemption of the mortgage (v). According to the Madras High Court, he is precluded by the provisions of the present section from bringing such a suit (w). See notes, 'Application of the above rules to suits on mortgage,' on p 46 above

Where a decree is appealed from, it is the appellate decree that must be looked to to determine the question of res judicata, and not the decree appealed from—A decision liable to appeal may be 'final' within the meaning of this section until the appeal is preferred. But once the appeal is filed the decision loses its character of "finality, and what was once res judicata again becomes res sub judice (matter under judicial inquiry). The appeal destroys the finality of the decision, the decree of the lower Court is superseded by the decree of the Appellate Court, and it is the latter decree that should be looked to to determine the question of res judicata (x).

A sues B for damages for cutting and removing certain trees on his land. The suit is dismissed on the grounds (1) that the land did not belong to A, and (2) that B did not cut the trees. A appeals from the decree on both these grounds but the appeal is dismissed on the ground that A had failed to prove that B had cut the trees. Note that the appellate Court does not decide the question of A's title. A then sues B for possession of the land claiming that the land belongs to him. B contends that the suit is barred as res judicata it having been found by the first Court in the former suit that the land did not belong to A. The suit is not barred for the question of A's title became res sub judice when the appeal was preferred and it did not become res judicata as the appellate Court did not adjudicate upon that question. But a judgment of an appellate Court will operate as res judicata as regards all findings of the lower Court which though not referred to in it are necessary to make the appellate decree possible only on such findings (y). An issue, again is res judicata where the judgment of the appellate Court shows that the issue was treated as material, and was decided although the decree passed merely affirms the decree of the lower Court which did not deal with the issue (z).

Consent decree and estoppel—The present section does not apply in terms to consent decrees, for it cannot be said in the case of such decrees that the matters in issue between the parties 'have been heard and finally decided' within the meaning of this section (a). A consent decree however has to all intents and purposes, the same effect as res judicata as a decree passed in litium (b). It raises an estoppel as much as a decree passed in initium (c) So long, therefore, as a consent decree stands, it is not open to either party thereto to give the go by to it, even if it contains clauses that are bad in law (d) A consent decree, however, is a mere creature of the agreement on which it is founded, and it may be set aside on any ground which would invalidate an agreement between the parties (e) But unless all the parties agree, an application cannot be made to the Court of first instance in the original suit to set aside the judgment or decree (f) except, apparently, in the case of an interlocutory order (g) See notes to s 96, 'Procedure for setting aside consent decree'

Explanation V: Relief claimed but not expressly granted—If a relief is claimed in a suit, but is not expressly granted in the decree, it will be deemed to have been refused and the matter in respect of which the relief is claimed will be res judicata. Thus where in a suit by a mortgagee against his mortgagor (1) for a money decree, and in default of payment, (2) for sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee was content to take a money decree only, it was held that a subsequent suit by him, on failure of the mortgagor to satisfy the decree to have the amount of the mortgage debt paid to him by the sale of the property, was barred as res judicata. The relief as to sale having been claimed by the mortgagee, but not having been expressly granted in the former suit, must be deemed to have been refused so as to bar the subsequent suit (h)

Liberty to bring a fresh suit—Where a former suit between the same parties in the same Court and for the same relief results in a decree of dismissal, but the judgment leaves it open to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit and leaves open untouched and undecided all matters affecting the rights of the parties, the decree does not constitute res judicata as such matters cannot be said to have been 'heard and finally decided' within the meaning of this section (i) But if the Court has in the particular circumstances of a case no power to reserve liberty to a party to bring a fresh suit, the subsequent suit may be barred as res judicata notwithstanding the liberty to bring a fresh suit. Fateh Singh v Jagan Nath Bakhsh (j), recently decided by the Judicial Committee, is a case directly on this point. In that case the plaintiffs brought a suit to set aside a gift made by a Hindu widow out of her husband's estate; they alleged that they were presumptive heirs. The widow died pending the suit. After her death the plaintiffs applied to amend the plaint by setting up a family custom of inheritance. Upon that application failing and the plaintiffs admitting that apart from the alleged custom they could not succeed, the trial Court dismissed the suit, but gave them liberty to file a fresh suit for possession. Subsequently the plaintiffs brought another suit to recover from parties to the former suit a share in the property basing their claim upon family custom. It was held that the suit was barred by res judicata since the custom was a matter which might and ought to have and (2) it was such as it is obligatory on a Court to grant —

1 The relief claimed must have been substantial, not auxiliary—A sues B (1) to recover her share in the estate of D, claiming the same as D's widow, and (2) for a declaration that she was lawfully married to D, a fact which B had denied. A decree is made by consent awarding Rs 55,000 to A in full satisfaction of her claim against the estate of D. The decree does not contain any declaration as to A's marriage with D. This circumstance will not bar a subsequent suit by A as D's widow, against B, to recover her share in the estate of a deceased relative, for the relief claimed in the former suit in respect of the legality of marriage was not claimed as a "specific" or "substantial" relief, but it was "auxiliary" to the principal relief as to her share in the estate of D (1).

(2) The relief claimed must have been one which the Court is bound to grant, and not one which it is discretionary with the Court to grant—Cases under this head relate principally to mesne profits. It was enacted by sec 244 of the Code of 1882 that, "nothing in this section shall be deemed to bar a separate suit for mesne profits accruing between the institution of the first suit and the execution of the decree therein, where such profits are not dealt with by such decree". That clause has been omitted in the present Code, and under O 20, r 12, mesne profits subsequent to the date of the suit are to be ascertained and provided for in the final decree.

A sues B for possession and for mesne profits both prior and subsequent to the suit. A decree is passed in A's favour for possession. The decree is silent as to mesne profits.

In the case put above there is no doubt, as to mesne profits prior to the date of the suit, that the plaintiff having claimed a relief in respect thereof and the relief not having been granted by the decree, the matter is res judicata, and A cannot institute a fresh suit for such mesne profits (2).

As to mesne profits subsequent to the date of the suit, it was held in cases under the Code of 1882 that it being discretionary with the Court to grant such relief, the fact of the decree being silent as to such mesne profits did not operate as a bar to a fresh suit for such profits (3). In cases under the present Code it has been held by the High Courts of Madras (4) and Allahabad (5), that where in a suit for possession and for past and future mesne profits, the Court gives a decree for mesne profits up to the date of the suit and says nothing about subsequent mesne profits, a fresh suit to recover subsequent mesne profits is not barred under the present Code any more than under the Code of 1882. In the Madras case Wallis, C J, said: "The word 'relief' in the Explanation means relief arising out of a cause of action which had accrued at the date of the suit and on which the suit was brought, and did not include relief such as mesne profits accruing after the date of suit as to which no cause of action had then arisen, but which the Court was nevertheless expressly empowered to grant. The Explanation having been reproduced in exactly the same words, the presumption is that it was intended to have precisely the same effect. I do not find any sufficient indication to rebut this presumption in the fact that sections 211 and 212 of the old Code were amalgamated to form Order XX, rule 12. The change introduced by the new rule is that the award of mesne profits in all cases is to be by preliminary decree, and that when ascertained they are to be embodied in a final decree: whereas under sections 211 and 212 they were to be ascertained in execution. This change does not appear to me to affect the construction of Explanation V to section 11, nor do I think is affected by the omission in section 47 of the new Code of the proviso to the corresponding section 244 of the old Code." On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Bombay (6), that where future mesne profits are claimed in a suit, but the decree is silent as to such mesne profits a fresh suit for such mesne profits is barred under Explanation V to this section, the reason given being that the omission of the clause which appeared

1. in section 244 of the old Code indicated that a separate suit should not be allowed for such mesne profits

Orders in execution proceedings—This section provides that a matter directly and substantially in issue in a former suit may be res judicata in a subsequent suit. But the section is not exhaustive of the circumstances in which an issue is res judicata. Thus an issue decided at an earlier stage of a suit may be res judicata in further and subsequent proceedings in the same suit, and it is so not by virtue of the provisions of this section—for the section is confined to issues in a former suit—but upon general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata [see notes, “Section not exhaustive, on p 30 above]. The leading case on the subject is Ram Kirpal v Rup Kumar (q), decided by the Judicial Committee in 1883. The principle of that decision is that s 11 is not exhaustive, and that the principle of res judicata still remains apart from the limited provisions of the Code. Prior to that decision it was held by the Courts in India that sec 13 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding with the present section) was not applicable to execution proceedings. The Judicial Committee held that though the section in terms did not apply to execution proceedings, the principle of res judicata applied to such proceedings. The question in that case was whether a decision in the course of execution proceedings in a suit that the decree according to its true construction awarded future mesne profits operated as res judicata so as to preclude the Court from trying the question over again at a subsequent stage of the proceedings. The High Court of Allahabad held that it did not. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that it did. Their Lordships said—

“The matter decided by Mr Probyn was not decided in a former suit, but in a proceeding of which the application in which the orders reversed by the High Court were made was merely a continuation. It was as binding between the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory judgment in a suit is binding upon the parties in every proceedings in that suit, or as a final judgment in a suit is binding upon them in carrying the judgment into execution. The binding force of such a judgment depends not upon sec 13, Act X of 1877 [s 11 of the present Code], but upon general principles of law. If it were not binding there would be no end to litigation. The parties were bound by the decision of Mr Probyn, who, whether right or wrong, had decided that it did [that is, that the decree awarded future mesne profits], a decision which, not having been appealed, was final and binding upon the parties and those claiming under them.”

The ratio decidendi of Ram Kirpal's case is that if a particular construction is put on a decree in proceedings on a former application for execution, it is not competent to the Court to treat that construction as erroneous and put another construction on it at a subsequent stage of the execution proceedings (r). It has similarly been held by the Judicial Committee in Mungul Pershad v Gunga Kant (s), that a decision on an application for execution after hearing both the parties that the application is not barred by the law of limitation, though erroneous, is binding on the parties in subsequent proceedings in execution. Their Lordships said “The order was made by a Court having competent jurisdiction to try and determine whether the decree was barred by limitation. No appeal was preferred against it. Admitting for the sake of argument, but only for the sake of argument, that the decree was barred when the . . . application was made, still his order, though erroneous, was valid, not having been reversed.” It has similarly been held that a decision that an application for execution is barred by sequent proceedings was actually raised in the former proceedings and decided. But these observations are obiter. And so are the observations in a Madras case that Explanation V cannot apply to proceedings in execution (e)

Consent orders—An order made by consent of parties in an execution proceeding is just as binding on the parties as an order after a contentious trial (h)

Application for if such an on for the (i).

Applications for review—Where an application is made for a review of judgment, and the application is refused, it does not operate as res judicata so as to bar a subsequent suit for the same relief and on the same grounds as those put forward in the application for review. Neither a 11 nor any doctrine of constructive res judicata can rightly be applied to such a case (j)

Estoppel against a statute—It is a general principle of law that there can be no estoppel against a statute (k). It has accordingly been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where a decree in a rent suit included illegal cesses in the item of rent, it was open to the defendant in a subsequent suit for rent to object to the rate of rent on the ground that it included illegal cesses, though the objection was not taken in the former suit (l). The Bombay High Court has held that the plea of res judicata can prevail even where the result of giving effect to it is to sanction what is illegal in the sense of being prohibited by statute. Thus where A mortgaged to B with possession a portion of a bhag of which alienation is prohibited by the Bombay Bhagdari Act 5 of 1862, and on the same day B granted a lease of the land to A and B subsequently obtained an ex parte decree for arrears of rent against A, it was held that A was precluded in a subsequent suit for rent from pleading that the land was inalienable (m).

- (c) where it appears on the face of the proceedings to be founded on an incorrect view of international law or a refusal to recognise the law of British India in cases in which such law is applicable
- (d) where the proceedings in which the judgment was obtained are opposed to natural justice
- (e) where it has been obtained by fraud,
- (f) where it sustains a claim founded on a breach of any law in force in British India

Alterations in the section—Clause (a) is new. Other alterations are merely verbal.

Foreign judgment—The expression foreign judgment is defined in s 2 as meaning the judgment of a foreign Court that is a Court situate beyond the limits of British India which has no authority in British India and is not established or continued by the Governor General in Council. The present section provides that a foreign judgment may operate as res judicata except in the six cases specified in the section. In matters of foreign judgments the Courts here are guided by very much the same principles as those adopted by the Courts of England (n). An act of State is not a judgment and it cannot therefore have the effect of res judicata. Thus it has been held that an order of the Political Agent of Meywar and the Maharana of Udepore deposing a high priest from his gadi is not a foreign judgment but merely an act of State and it cannot therefore operate as res judicata (o).

How a foreign judgment may be enforced in British India—A judgment of a Court of British India can only be enforced by proceedings in execution. A foreign judgment however may be enforced by proceedings in execution in certain specified cases only (s 44). In other cases a foreign judgment can only be enforced by a suit upon the judgment. That is to say if A has obtained a decree against B for Rs 5000 in a French Court at Pondicherry and if B has got no property in Pondicherry to satisfy the decree but has got property in Bombay A may bring a suit against B in Bombay to recover the amount of the judgment. The suit must be brought within six years from the date of the judgment (p) and if a decree is passed in favour of A, he may proceed to execute it by attachment and sale of B's property in Bombay.

It was at one time doubtful whether a suit would lie in British India upon the judgment of a Court of a Native State in India, or whether the plaintiff should sue upon the original cause of action. On the one hand, it was held by the Madras High Court that a suit did lie in British India upon the judgment of a Court of a Native State (g). On the other hand, it was held by the Bombay High Court that such a suit did not lie (r). According to the Bombay Court, the suit ought to be brought de novo on the original cause of action, — distinguished from the judgment to enable the Court to decide the case on its merits. The ground of the Bombay decision was that a Court which tries a suit upon a foreign judgment cannot institute an inquiry into the merits of the original suit, and hence it would result in grave miscarriage of justice if a suit were allowed to be brought on the judgment of tribunals of Native States where judicial inquiries were not ordinarily conducted with intelligence and integrity. To remove this doubt, and to obviate the danger contemplated by the Bombay Court, a clause was added into section 14 of the Code of 1832, which made it quite clear that a suit could be instituted in British India on the judgment of a Court of a Native State or of any other foreign Court in Asia or Africa (s). But it was at the same time provided by the said clause that a British Indian Court in which a suit might be brought on the judgment of a Court of a Native State or any other foreign Court in Asia or Africa should not be precluded from inquiry into the merits of the case in which the judgment sued upon was passed (t). The danger of miscarriage of justice referred to by the Bombay Court was thus effectively provided for. There was no such danger, however, in the case of the judgment of a foreign Court in Europe or America, and hence it was that the said clause was confined to judgments of foreign Courts in Asia and Africa including judgments of Courts of Native States in India. That clause has now been omitted for the simple reason that it is not possible to maintain the distinction above referred to in the case of all Asiatic Courts, for there are some Asiatic Courts, for instance, the Courts of Japan, that are entitled to be treated on the same footing as European Courts. The result is that a suit will lie upon a foreign judgment of any Court in Asia or Africa, and such a suit now stands upon the same footing as a suit brought on the judgment of a foreign Court in Europe or America.

Though a foreign judgment may be enforced by a suit in British India, it is not to be supposed that British Indian Courts are bound in all cases to take cognizance of the suit, and they may refuse to entertain it on grounds of expediency (u).

Operation of the section.—The operation of the section may be illustrated by the following cases —

(a) A sues B in a foreign Court. If the suit is dismissed, the decision will operate as a bar to a fresh suit by A in British India on the original cause of action, unless the decision is inoperative by reason of one or more of the circumstances specified in the section (t). If a decree is passed in favour of A in the foreign Court, and A sues B on the judgment in British India, B will be precluded from putting in issue the same matters that were directly and substantially in issue in the suit in the foreign Court unless the decision of the foreign Court is inoperative on any one of the six grounds specified in the section.

(b) A obtained a decree against B in the Cochin Court, and applied for execution of the decree in the High Court of Bombay. [Decrees of the Cochin Court may be executed in British India under s. 44.] It was proved that A obtained the decree at Cochin by concealment of essential facts and by fraud [see cl. (c) of the section]. It was held that execution of the decree should be refused (w).

A British Indian Court will not give effect to a foreign judgment pronounced by a Court without jurisdiction.—The leading case on the subject is Gurdial v. Raja of Faridkot (x). In that case A sued B in the Court of the Native State of Faridkot, claiming Rs 60 000, being the amount alleged to have been misappropriated by B while in A's service at Faridkot. B did not appear at the hearing, and a decree was passed ex parte against him. B was a native of another Native State Jhind. In 1869 he left Jhind, and went to Faridkot to take up service under A. In 1874 he left A's service, and returned to Jhind. The suit was brought against him in 1879. At the date of the suit B neither resided in Faridkot, nor was he a domiciled subject of the Faridkot State, nor did he owe allegiance to that State. Such being the case, the Faridkot State had no jurisdiction, on general principles of International Law, to entertain the suit against B in respect of the claim, which it should be noted, was a mere personal claim as distinguished from a claim relating to land or movables (y). The decree of the Faridkot Court was therefore an absolute nullity. A then sued B in a British Indian Court on the judgment of the Faridkot Court. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that the Faridkot Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. This decision was upheld by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The mere fact that the alleged embezzlement took place at Faridkot was not sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Faridkot Court. The result would be the same, if the suit were for damages for breach of a contract entered into by B with A at Faridkot (z). In other words a foreign Court cannot assume jurisdiction in cases where the claim is a personal one merely because the cause of action arose within its jurisdiction. But if B was residing at Faridkot at the date of the suit, the Faridkot Court would have had complete jurisdiction. In the case of personal claims, it is residence alone that gives jurisdiction in a suit against a foreigner (a). The same rule applies where the country in which the judgment was passed and that in which it is sought to be enforced have separate and distinct systems of administration and judicature, though owing allegiance to the same Sovereign. Thus a decree passed by the Ceylon Court [which is a foreign Court within the meaning of s. 2] in a suit on a contract against a native of British India who was not at the time of the action residing in Ceylon is a nullity so that it cannot be enforced by a suit in a Court of British India (b).

Suppose now that in the above case there was an Act in force passed by the Faridkot Legislature empowering the Courts of Faridkot to entertain suits in cases where the cause of action had arisen in Faridkot though the defendant was a foreigner neither residing in Faridkot nor owing any allegiance or obedience to the Faridkot State. Could effect be then given to the judgment of the Faridkot Court in a suit brought upon the judgment in a Court in British India? It has been held that no effect could be given to the judgment even under those circumstances, because no one State can by its legislation confer jurisdiction upon its Courts to entertain a suit in respect of a personal claim against foreigners who at the date of the suit neither resided in that State nor owed any allegiance or obedience to that State (c). But British Indian subjects owe allegiance to the Sovereign of Great Britain, and the British Parliament may therefore by legislation confer jurisdiction upon the Courts of England, as it has in fact done, against British Indian subjects in British India (d). Hence where an ex parte decree is passed by the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice of England (a foreign Court) against a British Indian subject residing in British India in an action founded on breach of a

13 contract committed within the jurisdiction of that Court, the decree is not a nullity, and effect may be given to it in a suit on the judgment instituted in British India (e)

In the last mentioned case, as also in the case of the Raja of Faridkot, the decree passed against the defendant by the foreign Court was an ex parte decree, that is to say, the defendant did not appear before the foreign Court, and the decree was passed in his absence. But what if the defendant had appeared and defended the suit in the foreign Court? This question is considered in the following paragraph.

Submission to jurisdiction of foreign Court—Where a suit is instituted in British India on the judgment of a foreign Court, effect will be given to the judgment, though that Court had no jurisdiction over the defendant, if the defendant appears and defends the suit brought against him in that Court without making any objection to its jurisdiction (f). But if he protests against the jurisdiction, and the suit is then proceeded with against him, the judgment is a nullity, and no effect will be given to it in a suit brought on the judgment. The protest against jurisdiction must be made at an early stage of the proceedings, hence where no objection to the jurisdiction was made until the case had reached the stage of appeal, it was held that it amounted to submission to jurisdiction (g). Nice questions sometimes arise as to what amounts to submission to jurisdiction. A defendant who employs a pleader in a suit against him in a foreign Court will not be said to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of that Court if the pleader states at the hearing that he had no instructions from his client (h). But a defendant who objects to jurisdiction though under protest, and also pleads on the merits thereby taking the chance of getting a decree in his favour, will be deemed to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the Court (i). But submission is not voluntary if the appearance is made only to release property seized by a foreign tribunal in attachment or other proceedings, in such a case the judgment of the foreign tribunal is not binding on the party. Whether submission was for the purpose of saving property or voluntary is a pure question of fact (j).

Agreement to submit to foreign jurisdiction.—Where there is an express agreement to submit to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court a judgment pronounced by such Court binds the parties and effect will be given to such judgment in British Indian Courts (l).

The mere fact of entering into a contract of partnership in a foreign country does not involve an agreement that all matters and disputes arising in connection with the partnership shall be submitted to, and therefore lie within, the jurisdiction of the Courts of that country (k).

Carrying on business in a foreign country through an agent—Persons who carry on business in a foreign country through an agent submit to the jurisdiction of the Courts of that country by giving the agent a power of attorney containing very wide powers including the right to institute or defend suits relating to any matters connected with their business or otherwise (m).

Possession of immovable property in a foreign country—The possession of immovable property in a foreign country gives the Courts of that country jurisdiction to deal with the property itself (n), but not jurisdiction in personam over the possessor, even in regard to obligations connected with that property (o).

Irregularities not affecting jurisdiction—In cases where a foreign Court has jurisdiction, or where the defendant has submitted himself to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court, the judgment of such Court is not vitiated by irregularities which do not affect the jurisdiction of the Court even when they are such as would, in the view of the foreign Court, render the judgment there a nullity (p)

Foreign judgment against a foreign firm—A, B, and C carry on business at Singapore in partnership in the name of X Y D, a creditor of the firm, brings an action against the firm in the supreme Court of Singapore, but A alone is served with the writ of summons B and C are British Indian subjects, and they did not reside at Singapore at the date of the suit or at any other time A decree is passed against the firm by the Singapore Court A suit is then brought by D in British India on the judgment of the Singapore Court against A, B, and C for a personal decree against them No personal decree can be passed against B and C as they were not served, though a personal decree may be passed against A (q) Compare O 21, r 50

Foreign judgment on a decree of a British Indian Court—The judgment of a foreign Court, obtained on a decree of a Court in British India, is no bar to the execution of the original decree in British India (r)

Clause (b)—In order that a foreign judgment may operate res judicata it is necessary that it must have been given on the merits of the case, [see notes to s 11, "Heard and finally decided," p 61 above] whether it be the judgment of a foreign Court in Europe or America or of a foreign Court in Asia or Africa If the foreign judgment is not given on the merits of the case, the plaintiff must prove his case independently of the judgment (s) Where in an action in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in England to recover a liquidated amount, the defendant having failed to comply with an order to answer interrogatories his defence was struck out and judgment was entered for the amount claimed for the plaintiff [O 11, r 21 below], and the plaintiff subsequently instituted a suit on the judgment in the Madras High Court, it was held that the judgment sued on was one which had "not been given on the merits of the case" within the meaning of this clause and that the suit was not maintainable (t) Similarly a judgment on an award obtained in England by default cannot be sued on in India, since it is not a judgment "on the merits of the case" (u) But a wrong view as to the burden of proof or as to the legal liability of a party does not render a foreign judgment one "not given on the merits of the case" within the meaning of this clause (v) Where the writ of summons in an action in the High Court of Justice in England was accepted by the defendant's solicitor and an appearance was entered by the solicitor on behalf of the defendant, a judgment passed against the defendant in his absence could not be said not to have been given on the merits of the case within the meaning of this clause the defendant having been called away from England to India suddenly owing to the war (w)

Clause (c)—The mistake must be apparent on the face of the proceedings In England it has been held that a mere mistake as to English law will not vitiate a foreign judgment, even though the mistake may appear on the face of the proceedings (x)

Clause (d)—The expression "natural justice" in this clause refers rather to the form of procedure than to the merits of the particular case The mere fact that a foreign judgment is wrong in law does not make it one opposed to "natural justice." There must be something in the procedure anterior to the judgment which is repugnant to natural justice (y). Thus a foreign judgment obtained without notice of the suit to the defendant is contrary to natural justice, and a suit on such judgment is not maintainable in a British Indian Court (z). But notice served on an agent empowered to sue and defend suits in the foreign Court is sufficient (a). As to sufficiency of notice, if the foreign Court has held service of the notice to be sufficient, it must be taken to be correct in the absence of any evidence to the contrary (b).

Limitation—Whereas in the case of a suit on a contract limitation merely bars the remedy, but does not extinguish the right, the judgment of a foreign Court is not open to the objection that the suit was barred by the law of limitation applicable in the country where the contract was made (c).

Where the Court of a foreign country holds, applying its own law, that a suit is not time barred, it cannot be said that it has refused to recognize the law of British India because the suit was time barred according to that law (d).

14 [S. 13. Exp. VI.] The Court shall presume, upon the production of any document purporting to be a certified copy of a foreign judgment that such judgment was pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction, unless the contrary appears on the record, but such presumption may be displaced by proving want of jurisdiction.

PLACE OF SUING.

15 [S. 15.] Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it.

Court in which suits to be instituted

Scope and object of the section—The object of the section in requiring a suitor to bring his suit in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it is that Courts of higher grades shall not be overcrowded with suits. This section is a rule of procedure, not of jurisdiction, and whilst it lays down that a suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade, it does not oust the jurisdiction of the Courts of higher grades which they possess under the Acts constituting them (e). Although therefore, as a matter of procedure a suit below a certain value ought to be instituted in the Court of the Munsif, the Subordinate Judge has still jurisdiction to try it (f). As a matter of procedure, however, he ought not to entertain the suit, but should return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Munsif as provided by O 7, r 10 [Code of 1882 s. 57] (g). This is explained more fully below.

Jurisdiction—The word “competent” used in this section has reference to the jurisdiction of a Court. Jurisdiction means the extent of the authority of a Court to administer justice. Thus a Presidency Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try suits in which the amount or value of the subject matter exceeds Rs 2,000, this is said to be the jurisdiction of a Court as regards its pecuniary limits. Nor can it try suits for the specific performance of a contract, or for an injunction, or for a dissolution of partnership. This is said to be the jurisdiction of a Court as regards the subject matter of a suit.

The jurisdiction of a Court may again be original or appellate. In the exercise of its original jurisdiction, a Court entertains original suits, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, it entertains appeals from decrees passed in original suits. The High Courts of Allahabad, Patna, Lahore and Rangoon, have no original jurisdiction.

Court of lowest grade competent to try a suit.—We have in British India a large number of Courts. The High Courts of Madras, Calcutta, Bombay, Allahabad, Patna, Lahore and Rangoon, have been established each by a Royal Charter. Other Courts in India have been constituted by Acts of the Governor General of India in Council, and they are of various grades with different pecuniary limits of jurisdiction.

In each of the three presidency towns, we have a High Court and a Small Cause Court. As regards High Courts, they are empowered in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction to try suits of any value except suits falling within the jurisdiction of Presidency Small Cause Courts of which the value does not exceed Rs 100 (A). The pecuniary jurisdiction of Presidency Small Cause Courts is confined to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 2,000 (i). From the above it is clear that both a High Court and a Small Cause Court are competent to try a suit, say for Rs 500, for damages for breach of a contract. But of these two Courts it is the Small Cause Court that is the “Court of the lowest grade” in a presidency town competent to try the suit. The suit, therefore, “shall” be instituted in the Small Cause Court as required by the present section. This does not mean that the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It has jurisdiction to try the suit, but in order that the High Court may not be overcrowded with suits, the Legislature has established Small Cause Courts, and the present section requires that suits which a Small Cause Court is competent to try shall be brought in that Court. We say ‘suits which a Small Cause Court is competent to try’ for there are certain suits which a Small Cause Court is not competent to try, such as suits for the recovery or partition of immovable property, or for the foreclosure or redemption of a mortgage of immovable property or suits for injunction or for specific performance (j). In presidency towns these suits must be brought in the High Court, though the value of the suit may be under Rs 100.

Outside the presidency towns, we have in each province a number of Courts of different grades which may be divided into three classes as shown in the following table—

Bombay Presidency Act 14 of 1869	Madras Presidency Act 3 of 1873	Bengal, N. W. P., and Assam. Act 12 of 1857
1 District Courts	District Courts	District Courts

S 15.

The jurisdiction of District Judges and Subordinate Judges, except Subordinate Judges of the second class in the Bombay Presidency, extends to all original suits, what ever may be the value of the suit. But a District Court is a Court of superior grade to a Subordinate Judge's Court for a District Court is the principal Court of original civil jurisdiction in the district, and it is also the Court of appeal from decrees and orders in certain suits passed by other Courts in the district including Courts of Subordinate Judges. The jurisdiction of a Subordinate Judge of the second class in the Bombay Presidency extends to all original suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 1000. The jurisdiction of a District Munsif in the Madras Presidency extends to all original suits (not otherwise exempted from his cognizance) of which the value does not exceed Rs. 2500. The jurisdiction of a Munsif in Bengal, North Western Provinces, and Assam extends to all original suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 1,000.

From the above it is clear that both a Subordinate Judge and a Munsif have jurisdiction to try a suit, say, to recover Rs. 500, for arrears of rent. But of these two Courts it is the Munsif's Court that is "the Court of the lowest grade" competent to try the suit. The suit therefore "shall" be instituted in the Munsif's Court as required by the present section.

As to Civil Courts in the Central Provinces, see Act 16 of 1885, in Oudh, Act 13 of 1879, in Jhansi, Act 18 of 1867. As to Provincial Small Cause Courts, see Act 9 of 1887.

Where a suit which ought to have been instituted in a Court of lower grade is instituted in a Court of higher grade.—Suppose that a suit which under the provisions of this section ought to have been instituted in a Munsif's Court is brought in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, and the Subordinate Judge, instead of returning the plaint under O 7, r 10, tries the suit notwithstanding objection taken by the defendant, and that a decree is passed against the defendant. Is the decree a nullity? No, for the Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction to try the suit. It is a case of irregularity not affecting the jurisdiction of the Court within the meaning of s 99 below (1). As to the case where a suit is by reason of over valuation brought in a Court of higher grade, see below notes, 'Over valuation and under valuation.'

Where a suit which ought to have been instituted in a Court of higher grade is instituted in a Court of lower grade.—In such a case the Court of lower grade ought to return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Court of higher grade [O 7, r 10]. If this is not done, and the suit is heard by the Court of lower grade, the decree will be set aside in appeal as one passed without jurisdiction. This is a case of want of jurisdiction as distinguished from a mere irregularity within the meaning of s 99 below (1). As to the case where a suit is by reason of under valuation brought in a Court of lower grade, see notes below 'Over valuation and under valuation.'

Principles regulating pecuniary jurisdiction.—It is the plaintiff's valuation in his plaint which fixes the jurisdiction of the Court, and not the amount which may be found and decreed by the Court (m). But jurisdiction may be destroyed, if the plaint is so amended as to exceed the pecuniary limits of the Court in which the suit is instituted (n). There is a difference of opinion, however, as to whether jurisdiction is ousted if interest or mesne profits claimed in a suit when ascertained and added to the value of the suit exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is instituted. See notes to s. 6, "Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees," and notes to s. 96, "Forum of appeal."

Over-valuation and under-valuation—Although it is the value put by the plaintiff on his suit that prima facie determines jurisdiction, it does not follow that a plaintiff is at liberty to assign any arbitrary value on the suit and thus be free to choose the Court in which he should bring the suit (o). Cases do occur in which a plaintiff sometimes over values his suit and sometimes under values it. The over valuation or under valuation may be erroneous, or it may be done intentionally by the plaintiff for the purpose of bringing his suit in a Court different from that in which it should have been brought had the suit been properly valued. If the over valuation or under valuation is patent on the face of the plaint, it is the duty of the Court to which the plaint is presented to return it to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court under O 7, r 10. If the over valuation or under valuation is not patent on the face of the plaint, but the defendant contends that the suit has been over valued or under valued, the plaintiff may be required to satisfy the Court that the suit has been properly valued if there are prima facie grounds for believing that the suit has not been properly valued (p) but not otherwise (q).

Suppose that a suit has been over valued or under valued so that it is brought in a Court whose grade is higher or lower than that of the Court which would have been competent to try it if the suit were properly valued. Is the decree liable to be set aside or reversed by the appellate Court? No, not unless (1) the objection as to jurisdiction by reason of over valuation or under valuation was taken by the defendant in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were framed or (2) the over valuation or under valuation is found by the appellate Court to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits (r). It has been so enacted by the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, s. 11. It does not make any difference that the over valuation or under valuation was erroneous or intentional (s). On this point the law was somewhat different before the passing of the Suits Valuation Act.

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where a suit is under valued with the result that the appeal from the decree in the suit is heard and decided by a District Court instead of by a High Court the decree of the District Court is one passed by a Court without jurisdiction and it is therefore a nullity. This happens in cases where a suit of which the true value exceeds Rs. 5,000 is valued at less than Rs. 5,000. A brings a suit against B for possession of immovable property in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. The real value of the suit exceeds Rs. 5,000, but the suit is valued at Rs. 2,100 only. A decree is passed in the suit for A. B files an appeal in the District Court, but the appeal is dismissed. According to the Calcutta decisions, the decree of the District Court is a nullity as being one passed without jurisdiction. The reason given is that the true value of the suit being more than Rs. 5,000, the proper forum of appeal, if the suit had been properly valued, would have been the High Court, and not the District Court, and that the result of the under valuation was that the jurisdiction of the High Court as the Court of Appeal was ousted (t). See notes to s. 21, "Objection to jurisdiction, when to be raised."

Where the subject-matter of a suit does not admit of being satisfactorily valued—There are several suits in which the subject-matter is not capable of being estimated at a money value, e.g., suits for restitution of conjugal rights, suits to remove a karnavan (u), suits to direct registration of a document under the Registration Act, 1908, s 77 (v) etc The court fee in such suits is Rs 10 as provided by the Court Fees Act 1870 Sch II, art 17, cl vi There is a distinction, however, between valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction and valuation for the purpose of ascertaining court fee We are now dealing with valuation for purposes of jurisdiction

In cases where the subject matter is not capable of being estimated at a money value it is provided by s 9 of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, that the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is what the High Court may specify by rules made under that section Where no rules are made it has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta that the safest and the most convenient course to follow is to hold that the valuation made by the plaintiff of his suit should be prima facie considered as the true valuation, but if from improper motives he either under values or over values it, the Court must decide what should be considered to be the proper value (w) The cases in which the above rule was laid down were suits for restitution of conjugal rights In a recent case it was held by the High Court of Madras that though the rule laid down by the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta might be the best rule in suits for restitution of conjugal rights, it was not the best rule in suits which affected property, and that the best rule in such cases was to value the suit according to the value of the property that might possibly be affected thereby (x) Thus it has been held by that Court that for purposes of jurisdiction a suit to compel registration of an instrument whether the instrument be registrable compulsorily (e.g., an instrument of gift) or voluntarily (e.g., a will) is to be valued according to the value of the property that would be affected by the suit (y) Similarly it has been held by that Court that though a suit for the removal of a karnavan is incapable of valuation and the court fee leviable is only Rs 10, it does not follow that a District Munsif has jurisdiction to try a suit for the removal of a karnavan, where the value of the tarwad property exceeds the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court (z) And it has been held by the same Court that a Munsif has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside an adoption if the value of the property which would be lost to the adopted son if the adoption were set aside, exceeds the pecuniary jurisdiction of that Court (a) The High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta would it seems hold differently In fact, the High Court of Allahabad has held that the value for the purposes of jurisdiction, of a suit to set aside an adoption is not the value of the property which may possibly change hands if the adoption be set aside, but the value put upon his claim by the plaintiff (b) But whichever view be correct, it is certain since the enactment of the Suits Valuation Act (s 11) that when once a suit of this class is decided on its merits by the lower Court the decision will not be reversed in appeal on the ground of want of jurisdiction, unless the cognizance of the suit by that Court has prejudicially affected its disposal on the merits

Provided that a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property held by or on behalf of the defendant may, where the relief sought can be entirely obtained through his personal obedience, be instituted either in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate, or in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain

Explanation.—In this section “property” means property situate in British India

Alterations in the section—The words “with or without rent or profits” in cl. (a) are new. The word “sale” in cl. (c) has been newly added

Chartered High Courts—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction (see s. 120). The High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, Patna, Lahore and Rangoon are Chartered High Courts, each having been established by a royal charter. The nature and extent of the jurisdiction of these Courts is defined by the charter for each of these Courts. As to the extent of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, see clause 12 of the Charter for these Courts set forth in Appendix II. The High Courts of Allahabad, Patna, Lahore and Rangoon have no original jurisdiction. As to the meaning of “original” jurisdiction, see notes to s. 15, “Jurisdiction,” on p. 77 above

Scope of the section—This section specifies the Court in which suits relating to immoveable property and suits for the recovery of moveable property actually under distraint or attachment are to be instituted. Section 19 indicates the Courts in which suits for compensation for wrong done to the person or to moveable property are to be instituted. Section III is a general section

Clause (a): suits for recovery of immoveable property.—A suit for the recovery of immoveable property situate in Bombay must be instituted in a Court in Bombay having jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Small Cause Court in Bombay has no jurisdiction to try such suit (c). The suit must therefore be brought in the High Court of Bombay. Hence it is that the section commences with the words "subject to the pecuniary or other limitations prescribed by any law". The insertion of the words "with or without rent or profits" is intended to remove any difficulty there may be where the defendant does not reside within the local limits of the Courts within whose jurisdiction the property is situate.

Clause (c): suit for foreclosure, sale or redemption—A mortgages certain immoveable property to B to secure payment of money lent to him by B. Here A is the mortgagor and B is the mortgagee. If A does not repay the loan on the due date B may institute a suit against A for sale of the mortgaged property, so that the mortgage debt may be paid out of the sale proceeds of the property, or he may sue for foreclosure of the mortgage. The decree in a foreclosure suit provides that if the mortgagor fails to pay the amount that may be found due to the mortgagee within a time specified by the Court (generally six months), the mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the property (d). If A offers payment of the mortgage debt to B, but B disputes the amount and refuses to reconvey, A may sue B for redemption of the mortgage, and the Court will pass a decree ordering an account to be taken of what will be due to B, and directing that upon A paying to B the amount so due, B shall reconvey the property to A (e). Suits for foreclosure, sale or redemption must be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the mortgaged property is situate.

Clause (d): suits for the determination of any other right to or interest in immoveable property.—There is no definition of immoveable property in the Code. "Immoveable property" is defined in the General Clauses Act, 1897, s. 3, cl. (25), as including land, benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth. Trees standing on land are immoveable property (f). But once the trees are severed from the land, they become moveable property. Growing crops are moveable property (see s. 2, cl. 13). "Immoveable property," we have said, includes "benefits to arise out of land." Rent that has already accrued due is moveable property, for it is a benefit that has arisen out of land, but rent that is to accrue due is immoveable property, for it is a benefit to arise out of land. Hence a suit for arrears of rent is governed not by the provisions of this section, but by those of s. 20, and it may be instituted in any one of the Courts specified in that section, although in such suit the plaintiff's title to the property of which the rent is claimed may incidentally come in question (g). But a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to rent where such right is desired comes under cl. (d) of the present section, and must be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate (h). A suit to recover a share of the sale proceeds of land that have already been realized is a suit for money governed by the provisions of s. 20 (i). But a suit by a vendor of land for the recovery of unpaid purchase money against a buyer who refuses to complete the purchase, is a suit "for the determination of any right to or interest in immoveable property" within the meaning of cl. (d) (j). A suit by a mortgagee to recover the mortgage debt from the mortgagor personally is a suit for debt governed by the provisions of s. 20, but if in addition to the claim against the mortgagor personally the mortgagee seeks to recover the mortgage-debt by sale of the mortgaged property, the suit will come under cl. (c) of the present section (k). A suit for maintenance is governed by the provisions of s. 20, but if in addition to the claim for maintenance the plaintiff claims that she is entitled to a charge on immoveable property in the hands of the defendant, the case is one within cl (d) of this section (l) A suit for dissolution of partnership with the usual ancillary reliefs is not a suit within cl (d) merely because part of the partnership assets consists of a factory (m)

Income and mesne profits of land situate outside British India—A suit will lie in a Court of British India to establish a right to a share in income derived from grants of land situated outside British India, but received by the defendant within the local limits of a British Indian Court (n) Similarly a suit to recover mesne profits of land situate outside British India, of which the defendant was in wrongful possession but of which he subsequently delivered possession to the plaintiff, may be instituted in a Court in British India (o) Both these cases, it is conceived, fall under s 20 below

Clause (e) : wrong to immoveable property—This refers to torts affecting immoveable property, such as trespass (p), nuisance, infringement of easements, etc

Proviso to the section—The last paragraph of the section provides that suits to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property, may be instituted at the plaintiff's option either in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate, or in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business or personally works for gain, provided—

- (1) the property is held by or on behalf of the defendant,
- (2) the relief sought can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant (q), and
- (3) the property is situate in, and not beyond, British India (r)

Equity acts in personam—We have in this proviso an application, though in a highly modified form, of the maxim Equity acts in personam When it is said that Equity acts in personam what is meant is that the Court of Equity in England (now the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice) has jurisdiction to entertain certain suits [suits in cls (a), (b), and (e) of the present section being entirely excluded] respecting immoveable property, though the property may be situate abroad, if the relief sought can be obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant The personal obedience of the defendant can be secured only if the defendant resides within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or carries on business within those limits For in the one case, the person of the defendant being within the jurisdiction, and, in the other his personal property, if he does not comply with the judgment, the Court may arrest the defendant and commit him to jail, or attach his goods until he complies with the judgment of the Court (s) But if neither the person of the defendant nor his personal property is within the jurisdiction the Court will not entertain a suit to obtain relief respecting immoveable property situate beyond its jurisdiction, for the Court cannot or that court execute its decree either in rem or in personam, and a Court will not entertain a suit if it cannot enforce its own decree (t)

Suits in personam—Suits in respect of which the Court of Equity in England exercises jurisdiction in personam are called suits in personam The essential feature of suits in personam is that the land in respect of which the suit is brought is situate abroad, but the person of the defendant or his personal property is within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought The land being situate abroad, the decree cannot be executed in rem, that is to say, it cannot be executed against the land. But the person or the personal property of the defendant being within the jurisdiction, the decree can be executed in personam, that is to say, against the person or personal property of the defendant. It must, however, be noted that the only class of cases in which the Court of Equity in England has jurisdiction over suits relating to land situated abroad, are cases of contracts, fraud, and trust. Thus suits for specific performance of contracts for sale of land (u), and suits for foreclosure (v), sale (w) or redemption (x) in the case of a mortgage of land, are cases of contract, and the English Court of Equity will take cognizance of such suits, if the contract is made in England, and the defendant resides or carries on business in England though the land may be situated abroad. Similarly, where lands abroad have been acquired by the fraud of a party residing in England, a suit to set aside the transaction will be entertained by the English Court of Equity (y). And the English Court of Equity will likewise entertain a suit to enforce express trusts affecting land situate in a foreign country if the trustee is resident in England (z). But the Court of Equity in England has no jurisdiction to entertain suits for recovery (a) or for partition (b) of land, or for damages for trespass to land (c). [Compare with this cls. (a), (b), and (c) of this section.]

Suits for immovable property situate within jurisdiction of different Courts

Provided that, in respect of the value of the subject-matter of the suit, the entire claim is cognizable by such Court

Scope and object of the section—The provisions of this section are intended for the benefit of suitors, the object being to avoid plurality of suits (d). A suitor B in a Court in district X on a mortgage of two properties one situate in district X and the other in district Y. The Court in district X has jurisdiction under this section to order the sale not only of the property in district X, but the property in district Y, and also to sell in execution of its decree the property in district Y (e). It is not necessary for A to bring two suits one in the Court in district X and the other in the Court in district Y. In the above case there are two properties situate in different districts. It does not make any difference if it is one entire property situate in different districts (f). The same principle applies to suits for partition (g) and to suits for the recovery of immovable property (h) But no partition can be made of property situate outside British India (i)

A sues B in a Court in district X to recover possession of two properties one situate in district X and the other in district Y. The suit is compromised as regards the property situate in district X. This does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court in district X to proceed with the suit as regards the property situate in district Y, unless it be shown that the compromise was a mere contrivance to defeat the policy of the rule of procedure as to local jurisdiction (j)

Chartered High Courts—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction (see s. 120). See notes to s. 16, "Chartered High Courts"

18. [S. 16A.] (1) Where it is alleged to be uncertain within the local limits of the jurisdiction of which of two or more Courts any immovable property is situate, any one of those Courts may, if satisfied that there is ground for the alleged uncertainty, record a statement to that effect and thereupon proceed to entertain and dispose of any suit relating to that property, and its decree in the suit shall have the same effect as if the property were situate within the local limits of its jurisdiction

Provided that the suit is one with respect to which the Court is competent as regards the nature and value of the suit to exercise jurisdiction

(2) Where a statement has not been recorded under subsection (1), and an objection is taken before an appellate or revisional Court that a decree or order in a suit relating to such property was made by a Court not having jurisdiction where the property is situate, the appellate or revisional Court shall not allow the objection unless in its opinion there was, at the time of the institution of the suit, no reasonable ground for uncertainty as to the Court having jurisdiction with respect thereto and there has been a consequent failure of justice

"And there has been a consequent failure of justice."—These words are new. They have been added in order still further to restrict the taking of technical objections as to jurisdiction

Torts committed beyond British India—This section contemplates torts committed in British India. Cases of torts committed beyond the limits of British India fall it is submitted, within s. 20 and a Court in British India has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for damages for such tort provided the defendant resides within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court at the time of the suit (k).

20. [S. 17.] Subject to the limitations aforesaid, every suit shall be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction—

Other suits to be instituted where defendants reside or cause of action arises

- (a) the defendant, or each of the defendants where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain, or
- (b) any of the defendants, where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain, provided that in such case either the leave of the Court is given, or the defendants who do not reside, or carry on business, or personally work for gain, as aforesaid, acquiesce in such institution, or
- (c) the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises

Explanation I—Where a person has a permanent dwelling at one place and also a temporary residence at another place, he shall be deemed to reside at both places in respect of any cause of action arising at the place where he has such temporary residence.

Explanation II—A corporation shall be deemed to carry on business at its sole or principal office in British India or, in respect of any cause of action arising at any place where it has also a subordinate office, at such place.

(b) A resides at Simla, B at Calcutta and C at Delhi. A, B and C being together at Benares, B and C make a joint promissory note payable on demand, and deliver it to A. A may sue B and C at Benares, where the cause of action arose. He may also sue them at Calcutta, where B resides, or at Delhi, where C resides, but in each of these cases, if the non resident defendant objects, the suit cannot proceed without the leave of the Court.

Alterations in the section—The words ‘wholly or in part’ in cl. (c) are new. Explanation III to s. 17 of the Code of 1882, which related to cause of action in case of contracts, has been omitted in view of the addition of the words ‘wholly or in part’ in cl. (c). See notes below ‘Cause of action in suits on contracts.’

Chartered High Courts—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction (see s. 120).

Scope of the section—The provisions of this section are to be read subject to the provisions of sections 16 and 19 (i). At common law, actions are transitory, such as actions on tort or contract, or local such as actions of ejectment from land. Section 16 deals with local actions. Sections 19 and 20 deal with transitory actions. If we divide actions into real, personal, and mixed, we may say that section 16 deals with real and mixed actions. Mixed actions stand midway between real and personal actions. Suits for compensation for wrong to immovable property are an example of this kind. Real actions that is, actions against the res or property, must be brought in the forum rei sitæ that is, the place where the property is situate and so must mixed actions. But personal actions may be brought in any place where the defendant can be found and hence they are called transitory actions as distinguished from local actions.

The present section provides that suits falling under it may be brought at the plaintiff's option (1) either where the cause of action arises or (2) where the defendant resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain (m).

“Actually and voluntarily resides”—Except in the cases mentioned in s. 16, the mere residence of a person within the local limits of a Court gives that Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit against him. Thus one partner may sue another partner for dissolution of partnership in the Court at Bulsar if the latter resided in Bulsar at the date of the suit although the partnership commenced and was carried on in a foreign territory (n). Clause 12 of the Charter provides that suits other than those for land may be brought in the Chartered High Courts if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit “dwells or carries on business or personally works for gain” within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of those Courts. There is no distinction between ‘residing’ and ‘dwelling’ used in its ordinary signification (o). The word ‘reside’ is used in other parts of the Code sometimes in a narrower and sometimes in a more extended meaning, see s. 136 O 3, r 2 and O 25, r 1. But there does not appear to be any difference between ‘residing’ within the meaning of ss. 16, 19 and 20 of the Code and "dwell" within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Charter. We therefore proceed to note the decisions bearing on the term "dwell."

"Dwell" within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Charter.—The dwelling or residence contemplated by clause 12 must be of a more or less permanent character. It must be of such a nature as to show that the High Court in which a defendant is sued is his natural forum (p). Hence it follows that where a party has got a permanent place of dwelling in one place, he cannot be said to "dwell" at a place where he has lodged for a temporary purpose only, e.g., to defend a suit brought against him (q), or for a change while on leave (r). Every person is deemed in law to have a dwelling or place of residence, and where a person has no permanent place of residence, he will be deemed to dwell where he is actually staying at the time. Thus where a defendant, who was Political Agent at Kolhapur left Kolhapur, en route for England on a year's furlough, after having sold off his furniture and other effects at Kolhapur, where he lived in a house belonging to Government, and stayed in Bombay for three days before sailing for England it was held that he "dwelled" in Bombay so as to give jurisdiction to the High Court in a suit instituted against him during his stay in Bombay (s). And in a Calcutta case, a racing man, who had come to Calcutta for a month for racing, was held to dwell in Calcutta he having no other residence at the time when the suit was instituted against him (t).

A person may have more than one permanent place of residence at the same time. In such a case he will be deemed to "dwell" in any one of the places where he is actually staying for the time being, and he may be sued in that place. In Orde v Skinner (u) the defendant, who had a dwelling place at Mussoorie, was held under the circumstances of the case to have another dwelling place at Bilaspur. Similarly, where a defendant spent his time alternately in Calcutta and the mufassal, it was held that he could be sued in Calcutta where he was residing at the time (v). But a person who has been living and carrying on business in Bombay for twenty years cannot be said to be residing at Ahmedabad because he has a family house at Ahmedabad which he visits occasionally, in such a case Ahmedabad cannot be said to be one of his places of residence (w). Where an Acharya (Hindu head priest), who had his permanent place of residence at Nathdwara, came to Bombay in April 1889 at the invitation of his devotees, it being his first visit to Bombay since his installation on the god in 1875, and while in Bombay exchanged visits with his followers, and stayed in a house purchased by him in 1888, it was held in a suit brought against him in Bombay in May 1889, that he did not "dwell" in Bombay, it not having been shown that he had purchased the house for a Bombay residence intending to come to Bombay from time to time and live in it (x). Where a person who was domiciled and resided in Mysore left his house in charge of a servant, and hired a house in Madras to which he brought his wife and family, and apprenticed himself for a year to a Vakil in Madras, it was held in a suit brought against him in Madras some months after his residence there, that inasmuch as he had taken up his abode in Madras, meaning to remain there for several months, and was actually living there when the suit was instituted, he "dwelled" in Madras within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Charter (y).

"Carries on business"—These words also occur in cl. 12 of the Charter, and the decisions under that clause will apply equally to cases arising under ss. 10, 19 and 20. For a person to be said to "carry on business" at a place, it is not necessary that he should have an office or a regular place of business there. Thus a person residing in the mufassal who goes once or twice a week from the mufassal to a friend's house in Calcutta, and does business there, will be said to "carry on business" in Calcutta (2). Nor is it necessary that the business should be conducted by him personally (a). It may be carried on by an agent employed by him, but it is necessary in that event that the following three conditions should concur, namely,—

(1) The agent must be a special agent who attends exclusively to the business of the principal, and carries it on in the name of the principal, and not a general agent who does business for any one that pays him. Thus a trader in the mufassal who habitually sends grain to Madras for sale by a firm of commission agents whose business it is to sell goods for others on commission, cannot be said to "carry on business" in Madras (b). So a firm in England, carrying on business in the name A B & Co., which employs upon the usual terms a Bombay firm carrying on business in the name of C D & Co., to act as the English firm's commission agents in Bombay, does not "carry on business" in Bombay, so as to render itself liable to be sued in Bombay (c).

(2) The person acting as agent must be an agent in the strict sense of the term. The manager of a joint Hindu family is not an "agent" within the meaning of this condition (d).

(3) To constitute "carrying on business" at a certain place, the essential part of the business must take place in that place. Therefore, a retail dealer in the mufassal who gains his livelihood by the profit upon sales of his goods in the mufassal cannot be said to "carry on business" in Bombay, merely because he has an agent in Bombay to receive his goods from Europe, and to make purchases for him in Bombay and to forward the same to him up country. In order that such a dealer may be said to "carry on business" in Bombay, it must also be shown that the agent made sales on behalf of the dealer in Bombay (e).

Business—A Hindu priest, who receives presents and offerings from his followers in Bombay, and keeps an account thereof, cannot be said to "carry on business" in Bombay, though the offerings may be on so large a scale as to oblige him to employ servants to collect and keep an account of them. The expression "carry on business" is intended to relate to business in which a man may contract debts and ought to be liable to be sued by persons having business transactions with him (f). It has also been held that Zamindari business is not business of the kind contemplated by s. 20 (g) or by s. 16 or s. 19.

"Personally works for gain"—The Government of this country cannot be said to "work for gain," for whatever income is obtained by it is held for the benefit of the Indian Exchequer (h).

"Acquiesce"—Under the Code of 1882 it was held that if a defendant, who did not reside within the local limits of the Court in which the suit was brought, did not apply for a stay of proceedings under section 20 of that Code, he should be deemed to have "acquiesced" within the meaning of clause (b) (i). But section 20 of the Code of 1882 has been omitted from this Code, there being sufficient provision made for transfers under section 22 of this Code. It would therefore, seem that a defendant, who does not apply for a transfer under section 22 will be deemed to have "acquiesced" within the meaning of clause (b) of the present section.

Leave of Court.—The leave to sue referred to in clause (b) may be given even after the institution of the suit (j)

Cause of action—Cause of action' means every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. It does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to a decree (k). It is in other words a bundle of essential facts which it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove before he can succeed in the suit (l). It has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant, nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour (m). The cause of action must be antecedent to the institution of the suit (n).

Cause of action in suits on contracts.—In a suit for damages for breach of contract, the cause of action consists of the making of the contract and of its breach at the place where it ought to be performed (o). Hence in the case of a contract, the whole cause of action would be said to have arisen at a particular place, say Poona, if the contract was made in Poona and the breach also took place at Poona. But if the contract was made in Belgaum and the breach took place at Poona (where it was to be performed), or if it was made in Poona and the breach took place in Belgaum (where it was to be performed), part of the cause of action would be said to have arisen in Belgaum and part in Poona. If the whole cause of action arose in Poona, a suit on the contract could be brought in the Court at Poona. If part only of the cause of action arose in Poona, and part in Belgaum the suit may be instituted in the Poona Court or in the Belgaum Court (p) [see cl. (c)]. [In cases governed by cl. 12 of the Charter, where the cause of action has arisen only in part within the local limits of the original jurisdiction of the High Court, the suit may be brought in that Court with the leave of the Court obtained before the institution of the suit. No such leave is necessary under cl. (c) of this section.]

As regards the making of a contract, a contract will be presumed to have been made at the place where on the face of it, it purports to have been made, though it may have been actually made elsewhere. Thus a promissory note dated at Bellary will be presumed to have been made at Bellary, though it may have been actually signed at another place (q). When a contract is concluded by postal communication, it will be deemed to have been made at the place where the letter of acceptance is posted (r). And where the acceptance of a proposal consists of the performance of the condition of the proposal, the contract will be deemed to have been made at the place where the condition is performed (s). A, residing at Karwar, sends a sum of money to his agent in Bombay with instructions to him to pay it to B a resident of Bombay, if B undertook to purchase goods for him in Bombay and ship them to him at Karwar. B agrees to buy and ship the goods and receives payment but he does not ship the goods. A sues B at Karwar to recover the amount paid to B. The Court at Karwar has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, for the whole cause of action arose in Bombay. The contract was made in Bombay, for the undertaking was given, and the money was received, by B in Bombay. The place of performance was also Bombay, for the goods were to be purchased in Bombay and to be shipped from that place (i).

As regards breach of a contract, it is to be noted that where a place is named in the contract for its performance, the suit may be brought in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the contract was to be performed or performance thereof completed. Where no place of performance is named in the contract, the intention of the parties must guide the Court in determining the place of performance (u). The mere fact that the creditor is described in a promissory note as residing at K does not make K the place of payment so as to give jurisdiction to the Court at K (v). Further, if any money is or becomes payable by one party to a contract to another in performance of a contract, and the money is not paid, the suit may be brought in the Court of the place where the money was expressly or impliedly payable (w). Thus where A and B entered into an agreement at Ruttam to carry on business in partnership at Muttra and after the business was carried on for some time the partnership was dissolved, and a sum of Rs. 1,00,000 was found due by B to A on taking the accounts at Muttra it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that A was entitled to sue B at Muttra that being the place where the balance was struck and the amount became due and payable (x). In a suit on a contract of insurance made in Rangoon and providing for payment of insurance money in Rangoon, the cause of action arises in Rangoon and not at the place where the property insured is damaged or destroyed (y). In the case of a contract of Bombay, the place of performance is Bombay (yy).

If goods are sold according to sample in Bombay and they are paid for in Bombay but under the contract they are to be delivered at Allahabad the buyer may sue the seller in the Allahabad Court for recovering back the price of the goods if they are not according to the sample. The question in such a case is whether the place of delivery is an essential part of the contract (a). Where A at Kasganj ordered dyes from B at Delhi with instructions to despatch them by value payable parcel post, and A paid for and took delivery of the goods at Kasganj, and on opening the parcel found that it contained clay, it was held that a part of the cause of action arose at Kasganj and that A was entitled to sue B for damages in the Court at Kasganj (a). In Motilal v. Surajmal (b) A, a merchant in Bombay, ordered goods from time to time from B who acted as his pucca adalat at Phulgaon. A sued B in Bombay for the amount due to him at foot of the account between him and B. It was held by Tyabji J., that (1) as instructions were sent by A to B from Bombay, (2) as accounts were rendered to A at Bombay, and (3) as demand was made for payment of the amount due from Bombay the payment of money was to be in Bombay, and a material part of the cause of action arose in Bombay. But where A sued B at Madras for services rendered to B at Hyderabad where also the contract was made, alleging that after the work had been done, B promised to pay in Madras it was held that as there was no consideration for the promise to pay in Madras,

S. 20. there was no contract in law to pay in Madras, and therefore there was no breach of the contract in Madras so as to entitle A to sue B in Madras (c)

A suit on a promissory note which is neither made nor payable in Bombay cannot be brought in the High Court of Bombay, though the note was passed for the balance of accounts in respect of transactions effected in Bombay (d) It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where D draws a hundi at Benares on his firm at Bombay in favour of H P & Co., a firm at Calcutta, and the hundi is then endorsed by B P & Co to P at Calcutta, part of the cause of action arises at Calcutta where the endorsement is made, and P may sue D in the Calcutta High Court after obtaining leave to sue under clause 12 of the Charter (e) The High Court of Madras however, has held that when a firm outside Madras draws hundis on a firm in Madras which under the contract the Madras firm has to honour and pay when presented to them in Madras, the payment cannot be considered to be made when the hundi is negotiated by the firm outside Madras but only when the payment is actually made by the firm in Madras on the hundi. Negotiation of the hundi is only a provisional method of realizing money from persons who are willing to accept the hundi for a small profit and to take the trouble of recovering the money from the drawee. If the hundi is dishonoured the endorsee will have recourse to the payee who had endorsed it over to him. So that the receiving of the money from an endorsee cannot be treated as payment towards the contract. The payment becomes complete only when the drawee actually makes payment in Madras. Where such payment is made against goods, the drawee may sue the drawer (seller) in Madras to recover money overpaid on the hundis, as part of the cause of action arises in Madras (f) The High Court of Calcutta has held that if P agrees to accept and pay in Calcutta for the accommodation of D in Cawnpore a hundi drawn by A at Delhi in favour of B at Delhi, and P accepts and pays the hundi in Calcutta, part of the cause of action arises in Calcutta and P may sue D to recover the amount paid by him in the Calcutta Court (g)

The debtor must find his creditor—In the Common Law the rule as to money payments is that if no place is named for payment, the debtor is bound to find the creditor provided the creditor is within the realm (g²) If this rule applies in India, then if no place is fixed for payment, the place where the creditor is is the place for payment, and the cause of action would to that extent arise at the place where the creditor is, the theory being that in such a case there is an implied promise to pay at the place where the creditor is. There is a conflict of opinion whether the said rule of Common Law applies in India, or whether if no place is named for payment, the rule as to the place of payment is to be determined by the provisions of sec 49 of the Contract Act, 1872. In a large number of cases it has been held that the rule of Common Law does not apply in British India (g³) In a Bombay case, it was assumed that the rule applied in India (g⁴) In a recent Allahabad case it was held that the Common Law rule applied at the ordinary case of buyer and seller and the ordinary case of principal and agent, but not to a commission agent whose business it is to buy and sell goods on behalf of any person willing to employ him as such (g⁵)

"Explanation III—In suits arising out of contract, the cause of action arises within the meaning of this section at any of the following places namely

- (i) The place where the contract was made,
- (ii) the place where the contract was to be performed or performance thereof completed,
- (iii) the place where in performance of the contract, any money to which the suit relates was expressly or impliedly payable

That Explanation was added into the old section in the year 1883 to remove a doubt as to whether a suit on a contract could be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose only in part. The doubt arose from the fact that that section provided for the institution of a suit in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose, and it was not clear whether the expression cause of action meant the whole cause of action or included also a part of the cause of action. Explanation III made it clear that a suit on a contract could be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose either wholly or in part. As Explanation III was confined to suits on contracts only, the question arose whether a suit other than one on a contract could be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose in part only and it was held that as in the case of suits arising out of contract, so in the case of other suits it was enough to give a Court jurisdiction over the suit if the cause of action arose in part only within the local limits of the Court (h). The addition of the words wholly or in part in cl (c) of the present section after the words cause of action makes it quite clear that a suit, whether it arises out of contract or not may be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose wholly or in part (i). It also rendered Explanation III unnecessary and the same has accordingly been omitted. But decisions bearing on that Explanation are still good law and they have been retained in the present commentary.

Cause of action in other suits—A suit for restitution of conjugal rights may be brought in the Court of the place where the husband resides or it may be brought in the Court of the place where the wife resides (j). A suit by a guardian for the custody of his ward removed by the defendant from Allahabad to Lahore may be brought in the Court at Lahore or it may be brought in the Court at Allahabad (k). A suit for damages for infringement of a trade mark may be brought in the Court of place where the defendant resides or in the Court of the place where the defendant publishes advertisements constituting infringement of the trade mark (l). A suit for damages for conversion may be brought in the Court of the place where the conversion originally took place (m).

Place of suing where decree sought to be set aside on ground of fraud—The question whether a suit can be instituted in one District for setting aside a decree passed by a Court in another District has been the subject of many decisions. The result of the actual decisions ignoring what are merely obiter dicta may be stated thus. A suit to set aside a decree obtained by fraud in Court X, where nothing is done beyond transferring the decree for execution to Court Y, can only be maintained in Court X that is, the Court which passed the decree (n). Where, however, a decree passed by Court X is transferred for execution to Court Y, and the decree holder makes an applica-

As to case (2) it was held by the High Court of Bombay in one case that where no part of the cause of action arose in Bombay, that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a foreigner who did not res de in Bombay but carried on business through an agent in Bombay (2). But that decision was disapproved in the later case of Girdhar v. Kassar (22). The point arose in a later case before the Privy Council but it was left open (a). The Madras High Court has held that the expression carrying on business in cl 12 of the Letters Patent includes carrying on business through an agent in British India by foreigners living outside jurisdiction (a2).

21 [New] No objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice

Objections to jurisdiction

This section is new. It proceeds on the lines of the Suits Valuation Act 1887, s 11. It applies to Chartered High Courts though ss 16 17 and 20 do not see s 120 below.

Jurisdiction—The present section relates to objections to jurisdiction [see marginal note to the section]. By jurisdiction is meant the authority which a Court has to decide matters that are litigated before it or to take cognisance of matters presented in a formal way for its decision. The limits of this authority are imposed by the statute charter, or commission under which the Court is constituted and may be extended or restricted by the like means. If no restriction or limit is imposed the jurisdiction is said to be unlimited. (b). A limitation may be (1) as to the subject matter (2) as to person (3) as to the pecuniary value of the suit or (4) as to place or it may partake of two or more of these characteristics (c). We shall deal with each of these in order.

(1) Subject matter—As to subject matter it may be observed that a Presidency Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain certain suits such as suits for the recovery or partition of immoveable property, suits for the foreclosure or redemption of a mortgage of immoveable property, suits for compensation for defamation suits for dissolution of partnership etc. see the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act 15 of 1882 s 19. These and certain other suits are also excepted from the cognisance of a Provincial Small Cause Court see Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1887 s 15. If a Presidency Small Cause Court or a Provincial Small Cause Court entertains a suit which is excluded from its cognisance its decree is a nullity. See also Bombay Civil Courts Act 14 of 1869 s 28 A and Bengal N. W. P., and Assam Civil Courts Act 12 of 1887, s 23.

(2) Person—As to this it may be stated that a defendant who is not subject to the jurisdiction of a Court may submit himself to its jurisdiction. See notes to s 13. Submission to jurisdiction of foreign Court on p 74 above and notes to s 86.

(3) Pecuniary value—A suit may be over valued and instituted in a Court of a higher grade or it may be under valued and instituted in a Court of a lower grade. As to these cases it is now provided by the Suits Valuation Act 7 of 1887, s 11, that an objection as to over valuation or under valuation shall not be entertained by an Appellate or Revisional Court unless, (1) the objection was taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were first framed and recorded, or (2) the Appellate or Revisional Court is satisfied that the over valuation or under valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits (c)

(4) Place of suing—Ss 16 to 20 of the Code relate to place of suing. See notes below, 'Place of suing'

Consent and waiver—Where by reason of any limitation imposed upon the authority of a Court, a Court is without jurisdiction to entertain any particular action or matter, neither the acquiescence nor the express consent of the parties can confer jurisdiction upon the Court, nor can consent give a Court jurisdiction if a condition which goes to the jurisdiction has not been performed or fulfilled. Where a limited Court takes upon itself to exercise a jurisdiction it does not possess, its decision amounts to nothing (f). But where a Court has jurisdiction over the particular subject matter of the action or the particular parties, and there is a mere irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction the decree passed by that Court as to that matter is not a nullity. The distinction between want of jurisdiction and irregular exercise of jurisdiction is of great importance. The apparent conflict in reported cases is largely due to failure to keep this distinction clearly in view. The leading case on the subject is Ledgard v Bull (g), decided by the Privy Council in 1886. In that case Lord Watson in delivering the judgment of the Board observed as follows—

The District Judge was perfectly competent to entertain and try the suit if it were competently brought, and their Lordships do not doubt that, in such a case, a defendant may be barred, by his own conduct, from objecting to irregularities in the institution of the suit. [But] when the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject matter of a suit, the parties cannot, by their mutual consent, convert it into a proper judicial process, although they may constitute the Judge their arbiter, and be bound by his decision on the merits, when these are submitted to him. But there are numerous authorities which establish that when in a case which the Judge is competent to try, the parties without objection join issue, and go to trial upon the merits, the defendant cannot subsequently dispute his jurisdiction upon the grounds that there were irregularities in the initial procedure which, if objected to at the time, would have led to the dismissal of the suit."

In Ledgard v Bull, the suit was for damages and injunction for infringement of a patent and it was originally brought in a Subordinate Judge's Court, the latter Court not having jurisdiction to entertain such a suit.

The principles laid down in Ledgard v Bull were reiterated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Meenakshi Naidoo v Subramania Sastri (h). That was a case in which the High Court of Madras had entertained an appeal from an adjudication from which no appeal was provided for by any enactment. Their Lordships held that the decree of the High Court was a nullity. In the course of the judgment their Lordships said

In the present case there was an inherent incompetency in the High Court to deal with the question brought before it and no consent could have conferred upon the High Court that jurisdiction which it never possessed Objection as to jurisdiction when to be raised—The objection to the jurisdiction of a Court may be taken at any stage of the proceedings. Thus it may be taken for the first time in appeal, or in second appeal, or in revision (1), or after remand in second appeal (2), or on appeal to the Privy Council (3) provided the objection is patent on the face of the proceedings. See notes to s 100. Pleas which may be taken for the first time in special appeal, and notes to O 41, r 1 "Grounds of objection which may be taken for the first time in appeal. There are however, two cases in which the objection as to jurisdiction will not be allowed by an appellate or revisional Court, namely, (1) in cases falling under s 11 of the Suits Valuation Act 1887 and (2) cases falling under the present section for which see notes below.

"Place of suing."—The present section provides that no objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court unless (1) such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and (2) unless there has been a consequent failure of justice. The marginal note to the section is objections to jurisdiction. The words used in the section are objection to the place of suing. This makes clear that this section does not apply to all objections to jurisdiction but only to such objections as relate to the place of suing. The words place of suing are used in the heading prefixed to s 15 as descriptive of the subject matter of the provisions in ss 15 to 20, as to the Courts in which suits including suits as to immovable property, are to be instituted.

S 20 provides in effect that suits other than suits for land may be brought in the Court of the place where the cause of action arose or the place where the defendant resides. The effect of the present section is that if a suit is brought in Court 1 under s 20 on the sole ground that the defendant resides within the local limits of its jurisdiction and the defendant does not object to the jurisdiction of the Court and a decree is passed in the suit he will be precluded from taking the objection as to jurisdiction in the appellate Court and further he will not be entitled to set aside the decree in a separate suit on the ground that it is a nullity. The reason is that the provisions of the present section apply to the case (1).

Sections 16, 17 and 18 deal with suits relating to immovable property. Suppose a suit relating to immovable property e.g. a suit for a sale of mortgaged property is instituted in contravention of the provisions of s 16 or s 17, and no objection is taken to the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is filed and a decree is passed in the suit for a sale of the property. There is no doubt that such a decree is a nullity. The point to be considered is whether the defendant not having objected to the jurisdiction of the Court the present section saves the decree from being a nullity. This raises the broad question whether the present section governs cases of want of territorial jurisdiction. The decisions on the subject are not uniform. The difficulty has arisen partly owing to the deep rooted notion that a decree which is a nullity ought to be disregarded in all proceedings, whatever may be the nature of the proceedings and partly owing to a ruling of the Privy Council in Sethuraj v. Maharaja of Jeypur (4) which turned upon s 21 In that case a suit had been instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam on a mortgage of property which was partly situated in British India and partly in a Scheduled District [see s 17]. No objection was taken by the defendant to the jurisdiction of the Court. The Court passed a decree for a sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant appealed to the High Court of Madras. The High Court held that the case was governed by s 21, and that the defendant not having objected to the jurisdiction of the trial Court, was precluded from taking that objection before the High Court, and they allowed the decrees of the Subordinate Judge to stand. The defendant appealed to the Privy Council. On behalf of the plaintiff it was argued before the Privy Council that the defendant not having objected to the jurisdiction of the trial Court he was precluded by the provisions of s 21 from raising the objection in appeal. On the other hand, it was argued for the defendant that s 21 did not apply to the case and it applied only where the right place of suing was one subject to the Code. Their Lordships upheld the contention for the defendant and held that the decree was a nullity on the ground that by s 1 (3) of the Code the Code was excluded from the Scheduled Districts and that the Subordinate Judge therefore had no jurisdiction at all under s 17 to entertain the suit so far as it claimed a sale of mortgaged land situated in the Scheduled District. Referring to s 21 and to the view taken by the High Court of that section their Lordships said: 'Their Lordships cannot agree with that view. This is not an objection as to the place of suing, it is an objection going to the nullity of the order on the ground of want of jurisdiction. The order for sale is made under sections [O. 34, rr 4-5] of the Code of Civil Procedure which the Code itself says are not to apply to Scheduled Districts.' It will be observed that the decision of the Judicial Committee is founded on the cardinal fact that the provisions of the Code do not apply to Scheduled Districts.

Let us now take the case of a mortgage of land the whole of which is situated in British India and no part of it in a Scheduled District. Suppose that the land is situated within the local limits of Court A, but the suit is instituted in Court B, and no objection is taken to the jurisdiction of Court B, and a decree is passed by Court B. Or suppose that the land is situated within the local limits of Court B, but the territorial jurisdiction of that Court is subsequently taken away by a Government Notification and transferred to another Court, and the suit is continued before Court B without any objection by the defendant, and a decree is passed in the suit. Do the provisions of the present section apply to such cases and save the decree from being a nullity? It has been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras in Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v Chidambaram (n) that the decree is not a nullity and that the provisions of the present section apply to the case though Court B had no territorial jurisdiction in respect of the property (n).

Questions arising under this section—We now proceed to consider the present section a little more fully. Suppose that in contravention of the provisions of s 16 a suit relating to immoveable property situated wholly in British India e.g., a suit for a sale of mortgaged property is instituted in Court A the land being situated outside

I [14] where the suit was heard after remand by a Court other than that to which the suit was remanded the latter Court having been abolished in the meantime. The High Court held that the decree was a nullity.

the local limits of the jurisdiction of that Court, and no objection as to jurisdiction is taken before that Court either at the earliest possible opportunity or at the settlement of issues,—

- (1) Is it competent to Court A to deal with the objection as to jurisdiction, if the objection is raised before the final judgment is passed in the suit? It is submitted that it is (o)
- (2) Is it competent to the appellate or revisional Court to allow the objection if for the first time it is raised before that Court? The answer to this question is in the negative. The very terms of the present section exclude the objection, and it has been so held by the High Court of Madras (p)
- (3) Can the objection be allowed if for the first time it is taken before the Court executing the decree, in other words, whether the present section is applicable to execution proceedings? It has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v Chidambaram (q) referred to above, that the present section applies to execution proceedings and that the objection cannot be allowed by the Court executing the decree. In that case Wallis, C J, said: "The effect of the section in my opinion is that objections which the appellate or revisional Court is thereby precluded from allowing must be considered cured for all purposes unless taken before the passing of the decree of the original Court. The ordinary way of questioning a decree passed without jurisdiction is on appeal or in revision and if this is forbidden a Court of first instance cannot in execution do that which the appellate or revisional Court is precluded from doing. On the other hand, it has been held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Gora Chand v Prafulla Kumar (r), that where a decree presented for execution has been made by a Court which apparently had no jurisdiction, whether pecuniary or territorial or in respect of the judgment debtor's person to make the decree, the executing Court is entitled to refuse to execute it on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction. The Full Bench said "Within these narrow limits the executing Court is authorised to question the validity of a decree."
- (4) Is it competent to the judgment debtor to challenge the validity of the decree in a separate suit? It has been held by the High Court of Madras that it is not (s). The High Court of Bombay has also held the same way (t). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that it is (u). In the Calcutta case in which it was so held the suit was instituted by a purchaser of the mortgaged property at a Court sale for a declaration that the decree was a nullity, and the decree was declared to be a nullity and the sale was set aside. The same High Court has also held that the plea that the decree is a nullity may also be taken by the judgment debtor in defence in a suit against him for possession by the auction purchaser, and that the Court may set aside the sale if the decree was a nullity (1)

It is submitted with respect that the present section creates an exception, as regards the place of suing, to the rule that where a Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit the decree is a nullity, and that the view taken by the Madras High Court is correct. It is true that a decree passed by a Court which is not a Court of competent jurisdiction cannot operate as res judicata under s 11. But s 21 creates what may be called a statutory waiver of the objection to jurisdiction so far as it relates to the "place of suing"

'Unless there has been a consequent failure of justice'—In order to ascertain whether there has been a 'consequent failure of justice' within the meaning of this section, the appellate Court must go into the merits of the case and form an opinion upon the justice or otherwise of the decision of the first Court (12)

Execution by a Court having no jurisdiction to execute the decree—Suppose that a decree is passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction. Suppose further that the decree is sent for execution to a Court that has no territorial jurisdiction over the immovable property comprised in the decree, and the judgment debtor does not object to the jurisdiction of the executing Court, and the property is sold and the sale is confirmed by the Court. Is it competent to the judgment debtor in a subsequent proceeding to object to the sale and contend that the sale was a nullity? It has been held by the High Court of Madras that it is not, the reason given being that the principle of the present section applies to the case. Is it competent to a subsequent purchaser of the same property held in execution of another decree passed against the same judgment debtor in another suit to contend that the first sale was a nullity? It has been held by the same High Court that it is, the reason given being that in a case like this the estoppel of the judgment debtor does not operate against the purchaser (13)

It has also been held by the High Court of Madras that if in the course of execution of a decree for delivery of immovable property the property is transferred from the jurisdiction of the executing Court A to that of Court B, and Court A nevertheless continues the execution proceedings and issues a warrant for delivery of the property, and the defendant does not object to the jurisdiction of Court A, the defendant is not entitled on appeal to raise the objection as to jurisdiction, the reason given being that the principle of the present section applies to the case (14)

22. [S 22] Where a suit may be instituted in any one of two or more Courts and is instituted in one of such Courts, any defendant, after notice to the other parties, may, at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, apply to have the suit transferred to another Court, and the Court to which such application is made, after considering the objections of the other parties (if any), shall determine in which of the several Courts having jurisdiction the suit shall proceed

Power to transfer suits which may be instituted in more than one court

Power of Court to stay suit pending before it—Sections 22-24 deal with the power of the Court to transfer not with the power of the Court to stay. But a Court has inherent jurisdiction to stay any suit which is an abuse of the process of the Court. Whether the institution of a suit in a particular Court is an abuse of the process of the Court is a question of fact in each case. A sued B in the Bombay High Court for damages for defamation alleged to be contained in the Bombay Gazette a daily journal published in Bombay. A and B both reside at Wardha in the Central Provinces. B applies for an order that the suit be stayed and the plaint returned to A in order that, if A thought proper it may be presented to the Court at Wardha. The grounds of the application are that neither he (B) nor the plaintiff (A) resides or carries on business in Bombay and that all his (B's) witnesses reside at Wardha. These facts are not sufficient to support B's application for a stay of the suit in the Bombay Court (u)

After notice and at or before settlement of issues—The words of this section are mandatory and therefore notice must be given before the application is made further, in a case where issues are settled the application must be made at or before such settlement (x)

23,24To what Court application lies

23. [Ss 22, 23, 24] (1) Where the several Courts having jurisdiction are subordinate to the same Appellate Court, an application under section 22 shall be made to the Appellate Court

(2) Where such Courts are subordinate to different Appellate Courts but to the same High Court, the application shall be made to the said High Court

(3) Where such Courts are subordinate to different High Courts, the application shall be made to the High Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the Court in which the suit is brought is situate

Note that s 20 of the Code of 1887 which provided for a stay of proceedings has been omitted as sufficient provision has been made for transfers under the present section

Two suits in two Courts under different High Courts—Where two suits between the same parties are pending in two Courts under two different High Courts either High Court may direct the suit pending in the Court subordinate to it to be transferred to the other Court (J)

24. [S 25] (1) On the application of any of the parties and after notice to the parties and after hearing such of them as desire to be heard, or of its own motion without such notice, the High Court or the District Court may at any stage—

General power of transfer and withdrawal

- (a) transfer any suit, appeal or other proceeding pending before it for trial or disposal to any Court subordinate to it and competent to try or dispose of the same, or
- (b) withdraw any suit, appeal or other proceeding pending in any Court subordinate to it, and
 - (i) try or dispose of the same, or
 - (ii) transfer the same for trial or disposal to any Court subordinate to it and competent to try or dispose of the same, or
 - (iii) retransfer the same for trial or disposal to the Court from which it was withdrawn

(2) Where any suit or proceeding has been transferred or withdrawn under sub section (1), the Court which thereafter tries such suit may, subject to any special directions in the case of an order of transfer, either re-try it or proceed from the point at which it was transferred or withdrawn

(3) For the purposes of this section, Courts of Additional and Assistant Judges shall be deemed to be subordinate to the District Court

(4) The Court trying any suit transferred or withdrawn under this section from a Court of Small Causes shall, for the purposes of such suit, be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes

Alterations in the section—These have been noted in their appropriate place in the commentary below

Form—For form of notice of application see App H form no 2

Jurisdiction—An order for the transfer of a suit from one Court to another cannot be made under this section unless the suit has been in the first instance brought in a Court that has jurisdiction to try it. But if after the transfer is made the parties without objection join issue and go to trial upon the merits the order of transfer cannot subsequently be impeached (a). The same rule applies to appeals (a). See notes to s 21

General power of transfer—It is a well known maxim of law that the plaintiff is in all cases dominus liti that is the person to choose where his suit shall be brought provided that he chooses a forum which the law allows him to choose. The transfer of a suit is an extraordinary matter and the Court should not transfer a suit against the plaintiff's will without good cause. The mere convenience of parties is not a good reason for a transfer of a suit to another Court (b) but it is a relevant consideration (c). In an Allahabad case an application was made by the defendants for a transfer of a suit on a mortgage from the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Allahabad on the ground that most of the properties mortgaged by the defendants to the plaintiff were situated in Allahabad and that most of their witnesses resided in Allahabad. The Court held that those facts did not constitute a good cause for transferring the case and the application was refused (d). A similar application was however allowed by the same Court in a later case (e).

"After notice to the parties"—This section provides that when an application is made by any of the parties for the transfer of a case the Court has to issue a notice to the other parties. Where an order is made without issuing notice the order according to the Allahabad High Court is one without jurisdiction and must be set aside (f). On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Madras that the provision as to notice is one of procedure and practice and the requirements as to notice may be waived (g).

"At any stage"—Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1857, it was held by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Allahabad that a suit could be transferred or withdrawn at any stage though it might be part heard and even in the course

24. of execution proceedings (h) On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that no order of transfer could be made after the hearing had once commenced, and that the Court had no power to make an order of transfer in execution proceedings (i) The words "at any stage" have been added to make it clear that a suit can be transferred even after the hearing has commenced

" Pending before it "—Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 it was held that a District Judge had no power to transfer to a Subordinate Court a suit pending before himself (j) Under cl. (a) of the present section the High Court and the District Court have the power conferred upon them to transfer a suit or appeal, though it may be pending before them

District Court—District Court in this section means a Court of unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction. An order of transfer under this section cannot therefore be made by an Assistant Judge whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to suits of a certain value (k)

Clause (a) " Court subordinate to it. "—A obtains a decree in a suit filed by her in the Court of the Divisional Judge Nagpur Division for dissolution of marriage under the Indian Divorce Act of 1869 The decree is then confirmed by the High Court of Bombay A then applies for alimony to the High Court of Bombay The proper Court to entertain the application is not the High Court, but the Nagpur Court Nor has the High Court power under this section to transfer the proceedings to the Nagpur Court, the latter Court not being a Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of sub s (1) (a) of this section (l)

Clause (a) " Suit "—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the word "suit" includes proceedings in execution (m) But it is not a proceeding in execution included in the expression "any proceeding" in the same clause ?

Clause (b) " Other proceedings "—A District Court has power under this clause to withdraw to its own file proceedings in execution transmitted by it to a Subordinate Court (n)

Re-transfer—Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 it was held that where a District Judge had once transferred a case to his own file from the file of a Subordinate Court, he could not afterwards re-transfer the case to that Court (o) Under the present section he has such power see cl (b), sub cl (iii)

Suit transferred or withdrawn from a Court of Small Causes—It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (p), Madras (q) and Patna (r), and latterly also by the High Courts of Bombay (s) and Calcutta (t), that the expression "Court of Small Causes" in sub sec (4) includes a Court vested with the powers of a Court of small Causes The view taken at one time by the High Courts of Bombay (u) and Calcutta (t) namely, that "Court of Small Causes" means a Court of Small Causes constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, and that it does not include a Court vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes under another Act, is no longer law

As a result of the provisions of sub s (4), the procedure of the Court to which a suit is transferred from a Court of Small Causes is governed by the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (w), and, further, no appeal lies from the decree of that Court in cases in which no appeal lies from decrees of a Court of Small Causes (x)

25. [Ss. 20-21] (1) Where any party to a suit, appeal or other proceeding pending in a High Court presided over by a single Judge objects to its being heard by him and the Judge is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for the objection, he shall make a report to the Governor General in Council, who may, by notification in the Gazette of India, transfer such suit, appeal or proceeding to any other High Court

Power of Governor General in Council to transfer suit

(2) The law applicable to any suit, appeal or proceeding so transferred shall be the law which the Court in which the suit, appeal or proceeding was originally instituted ought to have applied to such case

The object of this section is to empower the Governor General in Council to transfer cases from one High Court to another under certain circumstances. The section proceeds on the analogy of s 527 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898

INSTITUTION OF SUITS

Power to order discovery and the like

30. [New] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Court may, at any time, either of its own motion or on the application of any party,—

- (a) make such orders as may be necessary or reasonable in all matters relating to the delivery and answering of interrogatories, the admission of documents and facts, and the discovery, inspection, production, impounding and return of documents or other material objects producible as evidence,
- (b) issue summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents or such other objects as aforesaid,

Summonses to witness

[32. New] The Court may compel the attendance of any person to whom a summons has been issued under section 30 and for that purpose may—

Penalty for default

- (a) issue a warrant for his arrest,
- (b) attach and sell his property,
- (c) impose a fine upon him not exceeding five hundred rupees,
- (d) order him to furnish security for his appearance and in default commit him to the civil prison

See O 16, rr 10 13 r 17, and r 21

"To whom a summons has been issued."—This section applies only if a summons has been issued It does not apply where a person is merely ordered to produce a document (y)

JUDGMENT AND DECREE

33. [S. 198.] The Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment, and on such judgment a decree shall follow

Judgment and decree

See O 20, r 1

On such judgment a decree shall follow.—Under this section it is imperative that a decree shall follow the judgment and that it is the duty of the Court to comply with the provisions of the law Hence where no decree is drawn up, and an appeal is preferred from the judgment, the appeal should not be dismissed, but time should be given to the appellant to apply to the Court which passed the decree for drawing up the decree (z)

INTEREST.

S. 34. adjudged, from the date of the suit to the date of the decree in addition to any interest adjudged on such principal sum for any period prior to the institution of the suit, with further interest at such rate as the Court deems reasonable on the aggregate sum so adjudged, from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit.

(2) Where such a decree is silent with respect to the payment of further interest on such aggregate sum as aforesaid from the date of the decree to the date of payment or other earlier date, the Court shall be deemed to have refused such interest, and a separate suit therefor shall not lie.

Scope of the section—This section applies only where the decree is for the payment of "money". It does not apply where the decree is for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge. See notes below under the head "Interest in suits for enforcement of mortgage".

The three divisions of interest.—Interest that may be awarded to a plaintiff in a suit for money may be divided into three heads, according to the period for which it is allowed, namely—

- (1) interest accrued due prior to the institution of the suit on the principal sum adjudged (as distinguished from the principal sum claimed),
- (2) additional interest on the principal sum adjudged, from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, "at such rate as the Court deems reasonable";
- (3) further interest on the aggregate sum adjudged, i.e., the principal sum plus interest, from the date of the decree (1) to the date of payment or (2) to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit, "at such rate as the Court deems reasonable".

This section does not provide for payment of interest under the first head (a) applies only to the second and third heads.

1. Interest prior to date of suit.—As has just been said, this head of interest does not come within the purview of the present section. It is governed by other enactments to be presently noted. The subject may be considered under the following two heads

- (1) where there is a stipulation for the payment of interest at a fixed rate,
- (2) where there is no stipulation at all for the payment of interest.

1 If the rate of interest is stipulated, the Court must allow that rate up to the date of the suit, however high it may be. [Usury Laws Repeal Act 28 of 1855, s. 2]. But if the rate is penal, the Court may award interest at such rate as it deems reasonable [Indian Contract Act, 1872, s. 74]. Even if the rate is not penal, the Court may reduce it if the interest is excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair. [Usurious Loans Act 10 of 1918, s. 3].

2 If there is no express stipulation for payment of interest, the plaintiff is not entitled to interest except in the following cases—

- (1) Mercantile usage—Where it is allowed by mercantile usage (b)

(a) Credson v Ganesh (1900) 32 Cal L J 239 253, 60 I C 228.
(b) Doolubdas v Ramall (1850) 5 M I A 109

(u) Statutory right to interest—Interest is payable where a right to it, or an authority for its allowance or payment, is conferred by statute. It has thus been provided by the Negotiable Instruments Act 26 of 1881, sec 80, that when no rate of interest is specified in a promissory note or bill of exchange, the Court may award interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date on which the amount claimed became due and payable. Similarly it has been provided by the Interest Act 32 of 1839, that where there is no stipulation to pay interest, but the amount claimed is a sum certain (as distinguished from unascertained damages), and is payable at a certain time by virtue of some "written instrument," the Court will allow interest at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the date on which the amount became payable. If no time is fixed for the payment of the amount, the Court may award interest at the rate aforesaid from the time the creditor demands payment in writing intimating to the debtor that interest will be claimed from the date of such demand up to the date of payment. The provisions of the Interest Act 32 of 1839 are in the main a reproduction of the provisions of Lord Tenterden's Act [3 and 4 Wm 4, c 42, s 48]. It has been held by the House of Lords in London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co v South Eastern Railway Co (c), the modern leading case on interest, that the "sum certain" within the meaning of that Act must be a certain sum which is one absolutely and in all events due from one party to the other, and not a mere provisional payment to be made by one party to the other.

(uu) Implied agreement—Where an agreement to pay interest can be implied from the course of dealing between the parties (d).

It has been held by the House of Lords in London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company's case, cited above, that interest could not be given by way of damages for detention of a debt.

II Interest from date of suit to date of decree—The rate of interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree is in the discretion of the Court (e), and this discretion is not excluded even if a fixed rate is mentioned in the contract as payable "up to realization" (f). But though the rate of interest for the aforesaid period is discretionary, the Court should, in the exercise of that discretion, award interest at the contract rate, unless it would be inequitable to do so (g). The Court may under this head award interest in a suit for money, although interest is not specifically asked for in the plaint (h) [see O 7, r 7]. It has also been held that the Court may under this head award interest even on damages, but as such an order is out of the ordinary, the Court should state its reasons for the order (i). It is settled law that no interest can be allowed on damages for any period prior to the suit (j). It is submitted that no interest can be awarded on damages even from the date of the suit to the date of the decree. The section does not enable a Court to award interest where no interest is allowed either by the common law or the statute law (l).

III Interest from date of decree to date of payment.—The rate of interest from the date of the decree to the date of payment is also in the discretion of the Court. "The plaintiff getting security of a decree, has his interest reduced in the generality of cases" (l). If the Court awards interest from the date of the decree, but no rate is specified, the decree holder will be entitled to interest at the Court rate, which is usually 6 per cent (m). But if no such interest is awarded by the decree, it will be deemed to have been refused (n) [see sub sec (2)].

Illustration of the above rules—A lends Rs 5,000 to B to be repaid with interest at the rate of 18 per cent per annum. In a suit by A to recover the amount of the loan with interest at the rate aforesaid, it is contended on behalf of B that the rate of interest is penal (Contract Act, s 74). The Court finds that the rate of interest is not penal nor is the transaction substantially unfair. Hence—

- (1) as regards interest [on Rs 5,000] from the date of the loan to the date of the suit, the Court must allow it at the contract rate, that is, at the rate of 18 per cent per annum [Usury Laws Repeal Act, s 2]
- (2) as regards interest [on Rs 5,000] from the date of the suit to the date of the decree the Court may allow it at the contract rate, that is, at the rate of 18 per cent per annum, or it may in its discretion allow it at a lower rate or may disallow it altogether
- (3) as regards interest from the date of the decree to the date of payment on the aggregate sum adjudged [i.e., Rs 5,000 plus the interest adjudged under the above two heads] the Court may allow interest at such rate as it deems reasonable. This rate is usually 6 per cent. As to interest on costs, see s 35 cl (3)

Interest in suits for enforcement of mortgage—The section does not apply to decrees for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge. A decree for foreclosure of a mortgage or for the sale of mortgaged property passed under sections 86 and 88, respectively, of the Transfer of Property Act, now O 34 rr 2 and 4, is a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage. Where such a decree is passed the Court is bound to award to the mortgagee—

- (1) interest on the principal prior to the date of the suit at the rate provided by the mortgage [Usury Laws Repeal Act s 2] unless the rate is penal, in which case the Court may award such interest as it deems proper (o) [Contract Act, s 74], or the interest is excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair in which case also the Court may reduce it [Usurious Loans Act, 1918, s 3], and
- (2) interest on the principal from the date of the suit up to the date fixed by the Court for payment of the mortgage-debt, also at the rate provided by the mortgage [Transfer of Property Act, ss 86, 88 now O 34, rr 2 and 4] unless the rate is penal, in which case the Court may award interest at such rate as it deems proper (p), or the interest is excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair in which case also the Court may reduce it (q), further, where the decree is for the sale of the mortgaged property, the Court may in its discretion award—

- (3) interest on the aggregate amount of principal, interest and costs, from the date fixed for the payment of the mortgage debt up to the date of realization or actual payment, at such rate as the Court deems proper. It may be allowed at the Court rate, that is, 11 per cent per annum (r) or at any other rate (s). The Court is not bound to award it at the contract rate (t). The Court rate it is conceived, is the proper rate.

As to item (3) above, it was contended on behalf of the mortgagor before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maharaja of Bhartpur v. Kanno Dei (u) that, according to the true construction of s 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Court had no power to award interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment of the mortgage debt, but this contention was overruled, and it was held that that section did not preclude the payment of such interest, and this view was reiterated by their Lordships in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Kishen (v) and Raja Gokuldas v. Sheth Ghasiram (w). O 34, r 4 which is the main reproduction of s 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, now contains an express provision for the payment of such "subsequent" interest.

As to the rate at which such interest may be allowed, it was contended on behalf of the mortgagee in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Kishen (x) that the Court was bound to award the same at the rate provided by the mortgage, and not at the Court rate as was done by the Court below, but this contention was overruled, their Lordships holding that the rate was entirely in the discretion of the Court.

Rule of damdupat—This is a rule of Hindu Law according to which interest exceeding the amount of the principal sum cannot be recovered at any one time. This rule is in force in the Bombay Presidency (y) and in the Presidency Town of Calcutta (z), but it is not recognized outside that town (a) or in the Madras Presidency (b). The meaning of the rule is that if a Hindu lends Rs 500 to another Hindu, and the loan is not repaid till the interest amounts to Rs 600, the lender cannot sue the borrower for more than Rs 700 for principal and Rs 500 for interest. But the Court may, under this section award further interest to the lender from the date of the suit, though the aggregate interest may hereby exceed Rs 500. The reason is that the rule of damdupat ceases to operate from the date of the suit (c). But this is entirely in the discretion of the Court (d). It has been held by the High Court of Madras that the rule of damdupat does not apply where interest is claimed under a mortgage governed by the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (e). A different view has been taken by the High Courts of Bombay (f) and Calcutta (g). The rule of damdupat does not apply where the mortgagee has been placed in possession and is accountable for the rents and profits received by him as against the interest due (h). See Mulla's Hindu Law, Chapter 25.

COSTS.

S. 35

35. [Ss. 218-221. Jud. Act, 1890, s. 5, R. S. C., O. 45, r. 1.]

Costs.

(1) Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, and to the provisions of any law for the time being in force, the costs of and incident to all suits shall be in the discretion of the Court, and the Court shall have full power to determine by whom or out of what property and to what extent such costs are to be paid, and to give all necessary directions for the purposes aforesaid. The fact that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit shall be no bar to the exercise of such powers.

(2) Where the Court directs that any costs shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reasons in writing.

(3) The Court may give interest on costs at any rate not exceeding six per cent. per annum, and such interest shall be added to the costs and shall be recoverable as such.

Costs as penalty.—Costs cannot be imposed as a penalty beyond the costs of suit (i) "It is not according to law to give to a party by way of damages the costs as between solicitor and client of the litigation in which the damages are recovered (j). The object of awarding costs is to indemnify a party against the expense of successfully vindicating his rights in Court (k). As to compensatory costs in respect of false or vexatious claims or defences, see s 35A below

"Costs of and incident to suits."—This expression includes not only costs of suits, but costs of applications in suits. As to costs of applications, the Court may make an order—

- (1) at the time of disposing of the application, or
- (2) it may reserve the consideration of such costs for any future stage of the proceedings, in which case the form of the order as to costs may be either—
 - (a) "costs (of the application) reserved," or
 - (b) "costs (of the application) costs in the cause."

Costs to be in the discretion of the Court—The section provides that the costs of suits and applications shall be in the discretion of the Court. Such discretion must be a judicial discretion to be exercised on legal principles, not by chance.

medley, nor by caprice nor in temper (n) In the exercise of this discretion the Court is not confined to the consideration of the conduct of the parties in the actual litigation itself, but may also take into consideration matters which led up to and were the occasion of that litigation (o) The discretion conferred upon the Court by this section is very wide (p), in fact, wider, as stated in one case (q), than that under the English law (r) Thus the Court may order the costs to be paid by the parties in definite proportions, or it may order one party to pay to the other a fixed sum in lieu of taxed costs (s) Similarly it may disallow costs to a successful plaintiff, as where the rate of interest claimed by the plaintiff and allowed to him under the Usury Laws Repeal Act (t) is usurious (u) or it may make a successful plaintiff pay the whole costs of the other side (v) But though the discretion conferred upon the Courts by this section is wide, it is a judicial discretion, and must be exercised on fixed principles Where there are no materials before the Court on which it can exercise its discretion, it is not justified in depriving a successful party of his costs (w) The following are the leading rules on the subject —

1 Costs shall follow the event — The general rule is that costs shall follow the event unless the Court, for good reason, otherwise orders This means that the successful party is entitled to costs unless he is guilty of misconduct or there is some other good cause for not awarding costs to him (x) The Court may not only consider the conduct of the party in the actual litigation, but the matters which led up to the litigation (y) A refusal to go to arbitration is no ground for refusing costs (z), nor is the fact that the plaintiff brought his action without previous communication with the defendant (a) An offer of compromise which the Court considers insufficient is no bar to a plaintiff's right to costs (b)

It is provided by O 45, r 1, of the English Rules that where any action, cause matter or issue is tried with a jury, the costs shall follow the event unless the judge by whom such action cause matter or issue is tried or the Court shall for good cause, otherwise order It has been held by the House of Lords that the expression the costs shall follow the event means that the party who on the whole succeeds in the action gets the general costs of the action but where the action involves separate issues, whether arising under different causes of action or under one cause of action the word event should be read distributively and the costs of any particular issue to go to the party who succeeds upon it An issue, in this sense, need not go to the whole cause of action, but includes any issue which has a direct and definite event in defeating the claim to judgment in whole or in part A sued B for 164l for the price of 34 bags of goat hair sold to B B, by his defence pleaded (1) that the goods were not according to sample and were consequently worth 24l less, (2) that there was an overcharge on the bags for 2l and (3) payment into Court of the balance B succeeded on the first issue but failed on the second The Court of first instance gave judgment for A for 2l with costs On appeal it was held by the House of Lords, reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal, that the issue as to quality (1st issue) was an event within the meaning of the expression "the costs shall follow the event," and that B was entitled to the costs of that issue (c)

2 Where a party successfully enforces a legal right, and in no way misconducts himself, he is entitled to costs as of right (d)

3 The fact that a successful defendant has set up the Gaming Act as an answer to the plaintiff's claim is not good cause for depriving him of his costs (e) Nor is the fact that he has pleaded the Statute of Limitations (f)

4 If a plaintiff substantially succeeds he is entitled to his costs, though he may not have got the precise form of relief he wanted (g)

5 If a plaintiff recovers a less (but not a trifling less) amount than he claimed in the plaint his costs should be apportioned according to the amount recovered and not to the sum claimed (h)

6 Where a plaintiff succeeds on part of his claim but fails on the most important and expensive heads of controversy, he may be made to pay the whole costs of the suit to the defendant (i)

7 Everything which increases the litigation and the costs and which places on the defendant a burden which he ought not to bear in the litigation is a perfectly good cause for depriving the plaintiff of costs (j)

8 A successful party ought not to be deprived of part of his costs because some of his witnesses were guilty of exaggeration (k)

9 A person wrongfully made a party should get his costs (l)

10 Where both the parties advance pleas far in excess of their legal rights, each party will be made to bear his own costs (m)

11 Separate costs should not be allowed to defendants if the defence is common to all or their interests are the same (n)

12 Where two defendants join in defending an action and judgment is entered for one and against the other, the successful defendant is prima facie entitled to receive from the plaintiff half the costs incurred in the joint defence (o)

13 Where two plaintiffs join in one action, claiming for separate and distinct causes of action and judgment is entered in favour of one plaintiff and against the other, the successful plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant the whole of his general costs of the action, and the defendant is entitled to recover from the unsuccessful plaintiff the costs occasioned by his joinder as plaintiff (p)

14 Where the decree of the lower Court is confirmed by the appellate Court, the mere fact that the grounds upon which the confirmation proceeds are not the same as the ratio decidendi of the Court below, is no ground for departing from the rule that the costs shall follow the event (q)

Discretion not to be delegated—The discretion given to the Court under this section cannot be delegated to the taxing officer (s)

Costs against person not a party to the suit—An order for costs cannot be made against persons who are not parties to the suit (t) As regards an action for costs against a third person on the ground that he was the mover of and had an interest in the suit it has been held by the Privy Council that such an action cannot be maintained in the absence of malice and want of probable cause (v)

Costs where relief is claimed against the defendants in the alternative—See notes under the same head to O 1, r 3

No separate suit for costs—If costs are not awarded to a party, he cannot bring a separate suit for costs. But if costs are awarded a separate suit does not lie to realise the costs. The procedure in such case is if the costs are awarded by a decree to realise them by execution of the decree, and if they are awarded by an order, to realise them by executing the order (w) [see s 36]

"Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed"—Prescribed means prescribed by rules contained in or made under this Act [see s 2, cls 16 and 18]. As to rules dealing expressly with costs see O 11, r 3 [costs of interrogatories], O 24, r 4 [costs on payment into Court] O 35, r 3 [costs in interpleader suits]

"The provisions of any law for the time being in force"—The rule contained in this section, which leaves costs to the discretion of the Court, does not affect the provisions of special enactments giving costs in particular cases. Thus it is provided by s 27 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 that when the award of the Collector is not upheld by the Court, the costs shall ordinarily be paid by the Collector, unless the Court shall be of opinion that the claim of the party whose property has been acquired was so extravagant, or that he was so negligent in putting his case before the Collector that some deduction from his costs should be made, or that he should pay a part of the Collector's costs. These provisions are not affected by the rule contained in the present section. See the Land Acquisition Act, s 53, and the undermentioned case (w)

Whether an appeal lies for costs only—The decisions of a Court of law may be divided into three classes namely,—

I Decrees [Every decree is appealable (s 96)]

II Appealable orders (s 104)

III Non appealable orders (s 105)

S. 35.

1. It is settled that an appeal will lie for costs only when the costs are awarded by a "decree," if the order as to costs involves a question of principle; but it is not settled whether such an appeal will lie, if no question of principle is involved—A decree contains—

1. a decision on the rights of parties—this we shall call item No. 1—and
2. a direction as to costs—this we shall call item No. 2

A party, while appealing from item No. 1 or any part thereof, may appeal also from item No. 2. He may at the hearing abandon the appeal from item No. 1 and may proceed with the appeal from item No. 2 (x). But can he appeal from item No. 2 alone without appealing from item No. 1? In other words, does an appeal lie on a matter of costs only?

All the High Courts are agreed that such an appeal does lie—

- (1) where the order as to costs involves a matter of principle (y), as where a formal party to a suit against whom no relief is claimed is made to pay the costs of the suit (z) or
- (2) where there has been no real exercise of discretion in making the order as to costs. This may happen when a successful party is made to pay the costs of the losing party (a). If the discretion was exercised in fact, an appellate Court would not interfere merely because it would itself have exercised the discretion differently (b),
- (3) where the order as to costs proceeds upon a misapprehension of fact or law (c)

For brevity's sake we shall describe all the three cases as cases where a question of "principle" is involved. We may therefore say that it is settled law that an appeal lies for costs only, where the order as to costs involves a question of principle. But it is not settled whether an appeal lies for costs only, where no question of principle is involved. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that no appeal lies on a question of costs unless there is a question of principle involved (d). On the other hand, it has been held by the Bombay High Court that an appeal will lie for costs only, whether the order as to costs involves a question of principle or not (e). The ground of the Bombay decisions is that every decree being appealable, any part of it is also appealable, though it be the part relating to costs, whether there is a matter of principle involved or not. But even according to the Bombay decisions, though an appeal may lie for costs only, the appellate Court will not as a rule vary or set aside the order of the lower Court as to costs, unless there is a principle involved and the principle has been violated. From a practical point of view, it may be said that the distinction between the Calcutta and Bombay decisions is a distinction without a difference.

Does a second appeal lie on a matter of costs only? It has been held that it does, provided there is a question of law or principle involved (f), see s. 100, cl. (a).

II Appeal from a direction as to costs contained in an "appealable order."—The law as to appeal from a decision as to costs contained in an order

(x) Faruque v. Bhasan (1892) 16 Bom. 241

(as distinguished from a decree) is that if the order is itself appealable an appeal will lie from that part of the order which relates to costs (g). But no second appeal lies on a matter of costs awarded by an appealable order for no second appeal lies from any order see s 104 sub sec (a)

III Appeal from a direction as to costs contained in a non appealable order—Since no appeal lies from a non appealable order no appeal can lie from a direction as to costs contained in such order. Thus if an order is made adjourning the hearing of a suit and one of the parties is directed to pay the costs occasioned by the application for adjournment he cannot appeal from the direction as to costs for an order adjourning the hearing of a suit is not an appealable order it not being included in s 104 below (h)

Letters Patent appeal—An order as to costs is not a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent and is not appealable as such (i)

Costs against Secretary of State—The Secretary of State is in an unsuccessful litigation liable to pay costs like any other unsuccessful party (j)

Suit for contribution towards costs—A defendant is not entitled as against a co defendant to contribution in respect of costs to which both are liable unless there be some equity existing between him and the co defendant (k)

35-A. (1) If in any suit or other proceeding not being an appeal, any party objects to the claim or defence on the ground that the claim or defence or any part of it is as against the objector, false or vexatious to the knowledge of the party by whom it has been put forward, and if thereafter, as against the objector such claim or defence is disallowed, abandoned or withdrawn in whole or in part, the Court, if the objection has been taken at the earliest opportunity and if it is satisfied of the justice thereof, may, after recording its reasons for holding such claim or defence to be false or vexatious, make an order for the payment to the objector, by the party by whom such claim or defence has been put forward, of costs by way of compensation

(2) No Court shall make any such order for the payment of an amount exceeding one thousand rupees or exceeding the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction, whichever amount is less

(3) No person against whom an order has been made under this section shall, by reason thereof, be exempted from any criminal liability in respect of any claim or defence made by him

(4) The amount of any compensation awarded under this section in respect of a false or vexatious claim or defence shall be taken into account in any subsequent suit for damages or compensation in respect of such claim or defence

This section was added into the Code by Act 9 of 1922. The section does not come into operation until the Local Government has with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, by notification in the local Official Gazette directed that the Act shall come into force in the Province on such date as may be specified in the notification

The section provides for payment of costs by way of compensation in cases of false or vexatious claims and defences. See notes to s. 35, Costs as penalty on p 108 above

PART II.

Execution.

GENERAL.

36. [New.] The provisions of this Code relating to the execution of decrees shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to the execution of orders.

Application to orders

What decrees may be executed.—(1) The only decree capable of being executed is the decree of the Court of last instance—When an appeal is preferred from a decree and a decree is passed in appeal, the question frequently arises as to which decree is the one capable of execution, the decree of the lower Court or the decree of the appellate Court. The question arises in the following cases—

- (a) Where a decree has to be amended : [The decree to be amended must be the decree capable of execution]
- (b) Where the question is whether the execution of a decree is barred by limitation : [Time runs from date of decree capable of execution]
- (c) Where the lower Court has by its decree fixed a time for the payment of money, as in a suit for redemption : [Time runs from date of decree capable of execution]
- (d) Where under O 20, r 12, mesne profits are awarded from the date of the suit until the expiration of three years from the date of the decree : [Here 'decree' means decree capable of execution]
- (e) Where notice is to be given under O 21, r 22, when execution is applied for more than one year after the date of the decree : [Here decree means decree capable of execution]

In answering the question—which decree is capable of execution, it is important to bear in mind the provisions of O 41, rr 11 and 32. By O 41, r 11, it is provided that the appellate Court may dismiss an appeal (1) without serving notice of the appeal on the respondent in the circumstances there indicated, also (2) if the appellant does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing. But when the case goes on to a hearing, then the powers of the Court are defined in O 41, r 32 which provides that the judgment may be for confirming, varying or reversing the decree from which the appeal is preferred.^m It may be that when the appeal is incompetent as being out of time or as coming within the provisions of s 102, the proper course is to dismiss it. Apart from that the proper course is to confirm, vary or reverse the decree from which the appeal is preferred as provided by O 41, r 32 (i). Bearing these observations in mind, it may be stated that where an appeal is dismissed simpliciter, the decree capable of execution is the decree appealed from (m). But where the appellate Court acting under O 41, r 32, confirms, varies or reverses the decree appealed from, the decree capable of execution is the decree of the appellate Court (n). Similarly where the decree of the Court of first instance is confirmed by the High Court on appeal, and the latter decree is confirmed by the Privy Council, the decree capable of execution is the decree of the Privy Council (o). The result is that even where the decree of the lower Court is confirmed on appeal, the period of limitation to execute the decree runs from the date of the decree of the appellate Court. Similarly when time is fixed by the lower Court for the payment of money, and the decree of the lower Court is confirmed on appeal, the time for payment runs from the date of the decree of the appellate Court, though the latter decree does not expressly provide that the time for payment should be calculated from the date of the appellate decree (p). There are, however, two cases in which the decree of the lower Court was confirmed on appeal, but the Court held that the time for payment commenced to run from the date of the decree of the lower Court (q). But these cases seem to be of doubtful authority.

(u) The decree to be executed must be a subsisting decree—A obtains a decree against B and C. B subsequently sues A to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud, and the decree is set aside as against him. A cannot execute the decree as against B, for the decree does not subsist as against B. But he may execute the decree as against C, for the decree is a subsisting decree as against C (r).

(iii) The decree to be executed must be a decree of which execution is not barred by the law of limitation—See Limitation Act, 1908, arts 182 and 183, and see notes to s 48 below.

Execution of orders—The term 'order' is defined in s 2, cl 14, as the formal expression of any decision of a civil Court which is not a decree. An order under s 11 of the Guardians and Wards Act 8 of 1890 directing a guardian to pay a sum of money out of his ward's estate for the marriage expenses of a person dependent on his ward is not an 'order' within the meaning of s 2, cl 14, and it cannot be enforced against the ward after he has attained majority and the guardian has been discharged (s). But an order made after the dismissal of a partition suit directing the plaintiff to deposit in Court a certain sum of money as remuneration for work done by the Commissioners of partition, is an order within the meaning of s 2, cl 14, and it may be executed as a decree (t).

Merger of decree.—As to merger of decree of the first Court in the decree of the appellate Court, see Gajraj v Swami Nath (u) where all the cases are reviewed. See also notes to O 9, s 13, "Hearing of application after disposal of appeal."

37. [S 649, 2nd para] The expression "Court which passed a decree," or words to that effect, shall, in relation to the execution of decrees, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, be deemed to include,—

(a) where the decree to be executed has been passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the Court of first instance, and

(b) where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it, the Court which, if the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted at the time of making the application for the execution of the decree, would have jurisdiction to try such suit.

Changes introduced in the section—This section differs from the corresponding section 649 of the Code of 1882 in that the expression "the Court of first instance" in clause (a) has been substituted for the expression "the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred" As to the effect of this alteration see notes below

"Court which passed a decree."—Section 38 indicates the Courts by which decrees may be executed. A decree may be executed either by "the Court which passed it," or by the Court to which it is sent for execution. It may also be executed by the Court to which it is transferred under s 24 above (c). The present section explains the meaning of the expression "Court which passed a decree."

The expression "Court which passed a decree" includes not only the Court which actually passed the decree, but the Courts mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) of the present section. Reading sections 37 and 38 together, we obtain the following rules—

1 Where the decree to be executed is a decree of a Court of first instance, the proper Court to execute it is the Court of first instance

2 Where the decree to be executed is a decree passed by a Court of first appeal, the proper Court to execute it is also the Court of first instance [see cl. (a) of the section]

3 Where the decree to be executed is a decree passed by the High Court in second appeal, then also the proper Court to execute it is the Court of first instance. Thus where a suit is instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, and an appeal from the decree is preferred to the District Court, and a second appeal is preferred to the High Court, the proper Court to execute the decree of the High Court is the Court of first instance, that is, the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Under the Code of 1882, s 649, para 2, of which the present section is in the main a reproduction, the Court to execute the decree would be the District Court, the expression there used being "the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred" As a matter of practice, however, the Court of intermediate appeal never executed decrees passed by the High Court in second appeal. The substitution of the expression "Court of first instance" in clause (a) of the present section for the expression "Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred," gives legislative recognition to the practice followed by the Courts when the present code was enacted

4 Where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist, the only Court that can execute the decree is the Court which at the time of making the application for execution would have jurisdiction to try the suit in which the decree sought to be executed was passed. A Court does not cease to exist merely by reason that its head-quarters are removed to another place, or merely because the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court are altered (u).

5 Where the Court of first instance has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree — A decree is passed by Court X directing the sale of immoveable property within its jurisdiction. After the decree and before the application in execution for sale, the property directed to be sold is transferred by the Local Government's notification from the jurisdiction of Court X to the jurisdiction of Court Y. Has Court X jurisdiction to entertain the application in execution and to order the sale of the property? According to the Calcutta decisions both Court X and Court Y have jurisdiction to entertain the application in execution for the sale of the property, but if the application is made to Court X, it should not itself order the sale of the property, but transfer the application to Court Y for making and executing the order for sale (x). According to an earlier decision of the Madras High Court Court X has jurisdiction to entertain the application in execution, but the question whether it could itself order the sale of the property was not decided (y). In a later Madras case, the opinion was expressed that Court X had no jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution (z) but this view was overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court, the Full Bench taking the same view as the Calcutta High Court (a). But a Court to which a decree is transferred for execution has no jurisdiction to order either the attachment or sale of immoveable property in execution, if at the time of the order such Court had no territorial jurisdiction over the property (b).

Cl. (b). "Ceased to have jurisdiction to execute. — A Court does not cease to have jurisdiction to execute its decree, merely because its business is transferred by the District Judge under the Act constituting it to another Court (c). Where an order was made by the High Court of Calcutta rejecting a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and directing the petitioner to pay the respondent's costs but the order was silent as to the Court by which it was to be executed it was held that the circumstance that the High Court on its appellate side does not in practice execute its own decrees and orders, did not make that Court as regards the execution of the order, a Court that had 'ceased to have jurisdiction to execute' its decree (d) [O 45 r 15]. Nor does a Court which passed a decree "cease to have jurisdiction to execute it" because after the passing of the decree a party (e.g., Court of Wards) is added in execution who, had he been a party when the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted, would have deprived the Court of its jurisdiction (e). In a recent Madras case (f) the Court said with reference to cl. (b) of the section "In fact this portion of section 37 of the Civil Procedure Code clearly has reference to transfers of territorial jurisdiction from one Court to another. In applying this section the nature of the cause which put an end to the jurisdiction of a Court is immaterial (g).

COURTS BY WHICH DECREES MAY BE EXECUTED.

38. [S. 223, 1st para] A decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it, or by the Court to which it is sent for execution.

Court by which decree may be executed

Court which passed a decree—See notes to s. 37 under the same heading

Jurisdiction of Court executing a decree.—The following are the leading rules relating to the jurisdiction of Courts executing decrees —

RULE I—No Court can execute a decree in which the subject matter of the suit or of the application for execution is property situate “entirely” outside the local limits of its jurisdiction—Territorial jurisdiction, in other words, is a condition precedent to a Court executing a decree (h)

Exception I—The Court which passed a decree for the ‘enforcement of a mortgage of immoveable property’ included therein has power in execution of its decree to order the sale of such property, though it may be situate “beyond” the local limits of its jurisdiction—A sues B in a Court in district X on a mortgage of two properties, one situate in district X and the other in district Y. A decree is passed for the sale of both the properties. The Court in district X having jurisdiction to entertain the suit in respect of the property situate in district X (s. 17), has also jurisdiction to sell that property in execution of its decree, though the property is situate beyond its jurisdiction. It is not bound to send the decree for execution as regards the property in district Y to the Court of that district under cl. (c) of s. 39, but it may do so (i). In the latter case the decree as respects the property in district Y may be executed by the Court of district Y (j). See also notes to s. 17.

Exception II—Where ‘after the passing of a decree in a suit for the enforcement of a mortgage’ the whole of the immoveable property included therein falls, by transfer of jurisdiction, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of another Court the application for execution of the decree, according to the Calcutta rulings may be made either to the Court which passed the decree (though the property is no longer within its jurisdiction) or to the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the immoveable property falls by such transfer but where the application is made to the former Court, it should not itself order the property to be sold, but should transfer it to the latter Court for passing and executing the order for sale (k). In a Madras case, the opinion was expressed that it is the latter Court alone that has jurisdiction to execute the decree, and that it is to that Court alone that the decree holder should apply for execution (l). But this view was overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court, the Full Bench taking the same view as the Calcutta High Court (m). In the Full Bench case it was observed by Wallis, C.J., that the fact that s. 150 of the present Code confers upon the Court of the transferred area power to entertain the application in the first instance does not take away from the Court which passed the decree the power which it had according to the unbroken current of decisions for many years, namely, the power to entertain the application (n). See notes to s. 37 above.

Exception III—The salary of a public officer or of a servant of a Railway company or local authority may be attached by a Court though the disbursing officer may not be within the local limits of the Court’s jurisdiction. See O. 21, r. 48, and notes thereto.

RULE II—Where a decree has been passed for the payment of money, and the decree-holder applies for attachment and sale of immovable property (belonging to the judgment-debtor) which forms one estate of which a part is situated within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree and part beyond such local limits, the Court executing the decree has the power to attach and sell the whole estate including the portion situated beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction. See O 21, r 3 and notes thereto

RULE III—Whether a Court to which a decree has been sent for execution under s 111 has jurisdiction to execute the decree, if the amount of the decree exceeds the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court? To put the question in a concrete form, whether if a decree for Rs 7,000 is sent for execution to a Court whose pecuniary jurisdiction does not exceed Rs 5,000, the latter Court can execute the decree? Yes, according to Madras decisions (o) No, according to Calcutta (p), Bombay (q) and Patna (r) decisions. See notes to s 6, "Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees"

RULE IV—Where the decree sought to be executed is passed by a competent Court, the Court will not be deemed to be incompetent to execute the decree merely because by reason of the amount of interest or mesne profits ascertained for a period "subsequent" to the institution of the suit, the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of such Court are exceeded.—A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 4,000 and interest in a Court of which the pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs 5,000. A then applies to the Court for execution. At the date of the application for execution, the total amount of the decree by reason of accumulation of interest exceeds Rs 5,000. Has the Court jurisdiction to execute the decree, regard being had to the fact that the amount sought to be recovered in execution exceeds the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction? It has been held that it has (s). See notes to s 6, "Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees"

RULE V—A Court to which execution of a decree is transferred has no jurisdiction to order either the attachment or sale of immovable property in execution, if at the time of the order such Court had no territorial jurisdiction over the property (t)

Powers of executing Court—Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree.—A Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree. It must take the decree as it stands (v). It has no power to entertain any objection as to the legality or correctness of the decree (v), e.g., an objection that the decree sought to be executed was passed against a wrong person (w), or that it was passed against a lunatic or a minor not properly represented (x). The reason is that a decree though it may not be according to law, is binding and conclusive between the parties until it is set aside either in appeal or revision (y). For the same reason the Court executing a decree cannot alter, vary, or add to the terms of the decree (z), even by consent of parties, unless it is in adjustment of the decree (a) But a decree passed against a person who was dead at the date of the decree without bringing his legal representative on the record is a nullity and it cannot be executed against his estate (b) As to whether a decree passed by a Court without jurisdiction can be executed see notes to s 21 Questions arising under the section on As to the powers of a Court to which a decree is transferred for execution see notes to s 42 and O 21 r 7

Construction of decree by executing Court—But though a Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree it is quite competent to construe the decree where the terms of the decree are ambiguous and to ascertain its precise meaning for unless this is done the decree cannot be executed The construction of a decree must be governed by the pleadings and the judgment (c) And the Court should if possible put such a construction upon the decree as would make it in accordance with law (d) See notes Orders in execution proceedings on p 68 above

39. [S 223, 2nd and 3rd paras] (1) The Court which passed a decree may, on the application of the decree holder send it for execution to another Court,—

Transfer of decree

- (a) if the person against whom the decree is passed actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business, or personally works for gain, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court, or
- (b) if such person has not property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree sufficient to satisfy such decree and has property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court, or
- (c) if the decree directs the sale or delivery of immovable property situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it, or
- (d) if the Court which passed the decree considers for any other reason, which it shall record in writing, that the decree should be executed by such other Court

(2) The Court which passed a decree may of its own motion send it for execution to any subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction

The Court which passed a decree—See notes to s 37 under the same head on p 117 above

Jurisdiction of Court executing a decree—See notes under the same head to s 38, on p 119 above

Transmission of decree for execution—A decree passed by one Court may be transmitted for execution to another Court either on the application of the decree holder on one of the grounds stated in this section, or by the Court which passed it of its own motion. When a decree is sent by the Court which passed it for execution to another Court, the Court sending the decree shall send a copy of the decree and other documents mentioned in O 21 r 6, to the Court by which the decree is to be executed. The latter Court shall on receiving the copy of the decree and the other documents, cause the same to be filed (O 21, r 7). The decree holder may then apply to that Court for execution (O 21, r 10) unless he has already applied for execution to the Court by which the decree was passed (dd). The Court executing a decree sent to it for execution has the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself (s 42).

Clause (d)—In a Bombay case, the Court expressed a doubt whether clause (d) of this section enabled a Subordinate Judge to transfer a decree for execution to a Small Cause Court where the property attached was within the local jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge (e). Note in this connection the words 'of competent jurisdiction,' in sub-sec (2). These words are new.

A decree may be executed simultaneously in more places than one—A Court passing a decree has the power to send its decree to more Courts than one for concurrent execution. But this power should be sparingly exercised and when exercised it would be in many cases proper to impose terms on the decree holder that he should not proceed to a sale under all the attachments at once (f).

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for the transfer of a decree. The reason is that questions relating to the transfer of decrees are questions relating to "execution" within the meaning of s 47 [Code of 1882, s 244] (g). See s 2, cl (2).

Madras Village Munsif's Court Act 1 of 1889—This Act is a complete code of procedure by itself, and the provisions of the Code cannot be imported into it except to the extent provided by the Amending Act 2 of 1920 (h).

Award—An award filed under s 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act 9 of 1899 is enforceable under s 15 of the Act "as if it were a decree of the Court. It may therefore be transferred for execution as a decree under this section to another Court (i). So also an award made under rules framed under s 43 of the Co-operative Societies Act 2 of 1912 (j).

Result of execution proceedings to be certified

See notes to s 42 below

42. [S 228.] The Court executing a decree sent to it shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself. All persons disobeying or obstructing the execution of the decree shall be punishable by such Court in the same manner as if it had passed the decree. And its order in executing such decree shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself

Powers of Court in executing transferred decree

Powers of Court in executing transferred decree—A Court executing a transferred decree has no power to entertain any objection regarding—

- (a) the legality or propriety of the order directing execution, or
- (b) the right of the person shown in the order as the person entitled to execute the decree
- (c) the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree [O 21 r 7]

By reason of the rule contained in cl. (a) the Court executing a transferred decree cannot refuse execution on the ground that the order directing execution was wrong or improper and that it ought not to have been made under the particular circumstances of the case (l). Nor can it refuse execution on the ground that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation on the date on which the order for execution was made and that the order was therefore illegal (m). It is otherwise however where the transferring Court has made no order for execution but has merely transferred the decree for execution, and sent a certificate of non satisfaction. In the latter case the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution has the power to decide whether execution is barred by limitation (n) or it may stay execution (O 21 r 26) so as to leave the objection to be decided by the Court which passed the decree (o). See notes to s 33 "Powers of executing Court," on p 120 above. See also notes to s 11 "Orders in execution proceedings" on p 68 ante. As to decrees of Courts of Native States see notes to s 44 below.

By reason of the rule contained in cl. (b) the Court executing a transferred decree cannot entertain any question as to the validity of an assignment of the decree [O 21 r 16] if the assignee is shown in the order for execution as the person entitled to execute the decree (p).

Subject to the limitations mentioned above, the Court executing a transferred decree has the same powers in executing such decree as if the decree had been passed by itself (q). From this it follows that a Court executing a transferred decree has no more powers in execution than a Court executing its own decree. Thus a Court executing its own decree has no power to entertain any objection regarding the legality or the correctness of its decree. Therefore, a Court executing a transferred decree has also no such power. It cannot therefore refuse to execute the decree sent to it on the ground that the decree is wrong in point of law (r), or that it is defective (s), or that it directs a sale of property which is not "saleable" within the meaning of s 60 of the Code (t), or that it was obtained by fraud (u). It is clear that if a Court executing a transferred decree were allowed to enter into these questions, it would be virtually allowing it to sit in judgment upon the decree of the transferring Court. Again, a Court to which a decree is transferred for execution should not allow future interest where none is awarded by the decree (v). See notes to O 21, r 7, "Proof of jurisdiction," and notes to s 38, "Powers of executing Court, on p 120 above, and "Construction of decree by executing Court," on p 121 above. See also notes to s 21, "Questions arising under this section. Question No 3, on p 96c above.

Continuance of jurisdiction of Court executing transferred decree — The Court to which a decree is sent for execution retains its jurisdiction to execute the decree (1) until the execution has been withdrawn from it (w) or (2) until it has fully executed the decree and certified that fact to the Court which sent the decree, or has executed it so far as that Court has been able to execute it and certified that fact to the Court which sent the decree, or (3) until, having failed to execute the decree it has certified that fact to the Court which sent the decree as provided by sec 41. Until then, the only Court which has seisin of the execution proceedings is the Court to which the decree is sent for execution (x) and the Court which passed the decree has no jurisdiction to entertain an application for execution. Such an application, if made to that Court, cannot be regarded as a step in aid of execution so as to save limitation (y). It follows from this that if a decree is sent for execution by Court A to Court B, and an application for execution is made to Court B (O 21, r 10), but the application is rejected on the ground of some informality, and a fresh application for execution is subsequently made to Court B, it (Court B) cannot refuse to entertain it on the ground of want of jurisdiction, for its jurisdiction has not ceased as none of the three events mentioned above has happened (z). But if the application for execution is dismissed by the Court to which the decree is sent in consequence of the decree holder's failure to prosecute, and a certificate is sent to the Court which passed the decree that execution has failed by reason of non prosecution, the former Court has no power to receive a subsequent application for execution for its jurisdiction ceased when the certificate was sent, the proper Court then to deal with execution is the Court that passed it (a).

It may be noted in this connection that the Court to which a decree is sent for execution is not bound to certify under s 41 as soon as one application for execution fails in that Court. The decree holder might still be anxious to execute the decree in that Court and there is no reason why he should not be allowed to do so (b).

Execution of decrees passed by British Courts in places to which this part does not extend or in foreign territory

44. [S. 229B] The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare that the decrees of any Civil or Revenue Courts situate in the territories of any native Prince or State in alliance with His Majesty and not established or continued by the authority of the Governor General in Council, or any class of such decrees, may be executed in British India as if they had been passed by the Courts of British India

Execution of decrees passed by Courts of Native States

By notification.—For notifications issued under this section see General Statutory Rules and Orders, Vol I, pp 622 625 and Vol IV pp 682, 683 and 685

Foreign judgment passed without jurisdiction—This section was merely intended to alter the procedure by which decrees passed by Courts of Native States can have effect given to them in British India (c). It does not preclude a Court of British India to which a decree of a Native State is sent for execution by virtue of a notification under this section from ascertaining whether the foreign Court had jurisdiction to pass the decree or whether the decree was obtained by fraud and from refusing execution if it finds that the foreign Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree (d) or that the decree was obtained by fraud (e). See notes to s 13 'A British Indian Court will not give effect to a foreign judgment etc.' on p 73 above

Limitation for execution of a decree of a Court of a Native State—The period of limitation for execution of a decree of a Court of a Native State transferred for execution to a Court of British India is not the period prescribed by the law of that State, but that prescribed by the law of British India, that is, three years from the date of the decree [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch I, art 182] (f)

45. [S. 229A.] So much of the foregoing sections of this Part as empowers a Court to send a decree for execution to another Court shall be construed as empowering a Court in British India to send a decree for execution to any Court established

Court established or continued in Native States—For a list of such Courts see General Statutory Rules and Orders, Vol. I, pp 638 642, and Vol. IV, p 683

Note that there is no provision for sending decrees of British Indian Courts for execution to Courts in Native States established or continued by the authority of the Governor General in Council though s 44 provides for the issue of notifications declaring that the decrees of Courts of Native States not so established or continued may be executed in British India as if they had been passed by the Courts of British India. Such a notification was issued with regard to the Travancore Courts and also the Cochin Courts in 1887 as part of a reciprocal arrangement by which those Courts were to execute the decrees of our Courts, and there are regulations made by Travancore and other States providing for execution of decrees of our Courts upon receipt from our Courts of a copy of the decree, a certificate of non satisfaction, and a copy of any order for execution, or a certificate that no such order has been made. Such being the case there is no reason why our Courts should not act in aid of the Travancore Courts and furnish them as matter of comity with the documents they require to enable them to execute the decrees of our Courts under the powers conferred upon them by the legislative authority in Travancore. The policy of the Indian legislature has been to leave the decrees of our Courts to be executed in the Courts of Native States pursuant to the legislative authority of such States, but not to provide as they have in s 45 as regards a limited number of such Courts, for the transfer to them of the decrees of our Courts for execution so as to make them the executing Courts as regards such decrees for all purposes with authority to decide all questions arising in the course of execution (g)

' By notification.'—For notifications issued under this section, see General Statutory Rules and Orders, Vol I pp 618 621

46. [New] (1) Upon the application of the decree-holder the Court which passed the decree may, whenever it thinks fit, issue a precept to any other Court which would be competent to execute such decree to attach any property belonging to the judgment-debtor and specified in the precept

Precepts

(2) The Court to which a precept is sent shall proceed to attach the property in the manner prescribed in regard to the attachment of property in execution of a decree

Provided that no attachment under a precept shall continue for more than two months unless the period of attachment is extended by an order of the Court which passed the decree or unless before the determination of such attachment the decree has been transferred to the Court by which the attachment has been made and the decree-holder has applied for an order for the sale of such property

Attachment under precept—The object of a precept is to enable a decree holder to obtain an interim attachment where there is ground to apprehend that he may otherwise be deprived of the fruits of his decree. No such attachment however, can continue for more than two months except in the two cases mentioned in the section.

The effect of the latter part of the section is to do away with a re attachment of property attached under a precept where, before the determination of the interim attachment the decree holder applies for execution against the property.

QUESTIONS TO BE DETERMINED BY COURT

EXECUTING DECREE

47. [S 244] (1) All questions (pp 128-132) arising between the parties to the suit (p. 134) in which the decree was passed, or their representatives (p 135 143), and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit (pp. 128-132, p 144)

Questions to be determined by the Court executing decree

(2) The Court may, subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional court-fees (p 133)

(3) Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the representative of a party, such question shall, for the purposes of this section, be determined by the Court (p 142).

Explanation—For the purposes of this section, a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed, are parties to the suit (p 134).

Changes introduced in the section—This section corresponds with s 244 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars—

- 1 Sub clauses (a) and (b) of s 244 which provided for the determination of questions regarding the amount of meine profits and interest in execution proceedings have been omitted, as it was deemed expedient that such questions should be determined by the decree and not in execution. See O 20, r 12
2. The words 'or to the stay of execution thereof' which occurred in s. 244 after the words "execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" have been omitted in the present section. As to the effect of the omission, see notes "stay of execution," on p. 133 below
- 3 Sub section (2) of the present section is new. It gives legislative recognition to the practice followed by the Courts under the Code of 1882. See notes below under the head "Sub section (2)."

- 4 Under the old s 244 the Court executing the decree had the option, when a question arose as to who was the representative of a party, itself to determine the question or to stay execution until it was determined by a separate suit. Sub section (3) of the present section renders it obligatory on the executing Court itself to determine the question, as it was considered inexpedient that separate suits should be instituted for the decision of such questions.
- 5 The Explanation sets at rest a conflict of judicial decisions noted below in the commentary under the head "Parties to the suit." Explanation to the section."

Scope of the section—It is settled law in India that no action lies on an executable judgment, the only remedy being execution (h). This section provides inter alia that all questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree, and arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. This section has been enacted for the beneficial purpose of checking needless litigation (i). It provides a cheap and expeditious remedy by empowering the Court executing a decree to determine questions that may arise in execution proceedings without requiring the parties to bring a separate suit in respect of every question that may arise between them in such proceedings. Hence this section should not be construed narrowly (j). At the same time the conditions which bar a separate suit should not be lost sight of. Those conditions are two in number, the one relating to the character of the questions in respect of which separate suits are prohibited, and the other to the character of the parties between whom the questions arise. The questions in respect of which a separate suit is barred must be questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. The parties between whom the questions arise must be "the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives." If a question is of the character mentioned above and if it arises between the parties aforesaid, it cannot form the subject of a separate suit, it can only be determined by the Court executing the decree. But if the question is not of that character, or if it does not arise between the parties aforesaid it may be determined by a separate suit.

Questions relating to execution, etc. Separate suit will not lie—When it is said with reference to this section that a separate suit will not lie, it is understood that the question relates to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and, further, that it arises between the parties to the suit or their representatives. We proceed to state the leading cases on the subject —

1 Claim for excess of property taken in execution of decree—If a decree holder takes in execution land which is not at all covered by the decree, or land which is in excess of the decree, the proper course for the judgment debtor is to proceed by an application under this section for the recovery of the land in the one case, and the excess in the other, and not by a separate suit (l). The reason is that the question relates to the execution of the decree, and further, it arises between the parties to the suit.

2 Restitution of property taken in execution of a decree, when the decree is amended—A obtains a preliminary decree against B in a suit for sale of certain property mortgaged to him. On taking accounts it is found that a sum of Rs. 7,000 is due by B to A.

(k) Dulced v. Rewal (1874) 22 W. R. 435. Bru Mahata v. Shyama Churn (1895) 22 Cal. 453. Pratab Singh v. Beni Ram (1880) 2 All. 61. Abdul Karim v. Ismailun Nissa Bibi (1916) 38 All. 339, 343. 34 I. C. 231. Ganpatrao v. Anandrao (1970) 44 Bom. 97, 55 I. C. 967, Sharfu v. Mirkhan (1910) 1 Lah. L. J. 230.

on the mortgage, and a decree is passed for 1 for that amount. After the decree has been fully executed, B discovers an error in calculation, and the decree is amended by substituting Rs 6,000 for Rs 7,000. B may claim a refund of Rs 1,000 by an application under this section, but not by a separate suit (l). Similarly if A discovers an error in calculation after the decree has been executed, and the decree is amended by substituting, say Rs 7,500 for Rs 7,000, A may claim the excess of Rs 500 by an application under this section, but not by a separate suit (m).

3. Restitution of property sold in execution, when the sale is set aside—A obtains a decree against B for Rs 3,000. B fails to pay the amount of the decree and his property is thereupon sold in execution, and purchased by A, the decree holder. The sale is set aside on B's application on the ground that the property was purchased by A without the leave of the Court as required by O 21, r 72. B may claim restitution of the property by an application under this section, but not by a separate suit (n). See s 144, sub s (2), which applies where a decree is varied or reversed.

4. Claim by legal representative of a deceased judgment debtor for restitution of property taken in execution, on the ground that the judgment debtor was dead at the date of the decree—If the hearing of a suit is concluded and judgment reserved, and the defendant then dies, the decree is binding upon his estate, though the judgment is delivered after his death (o). The reason is that in such a case nothing is left to be done by the parties from the moment the judgment is reserved, and any delay that takes place is the delay of the Court (p) [see O 22, r 6]. But if the defendant dies before the hearing is concluded, and a decree is passed against him without his legal representative being brought on the record, the decree is a nullity, and it cannot be executed against his legal representative (q). Suppose now that a defendant dies before the hearing is concluded, that a decree is passed against him without his legal representative being brought on the record, and that the decree holder applies for execution of the decree against the legal representative under s 50, but the latter does not object to execution on the ground that the decree is a nullity, and that the property of the deceased is sold in execution. Is the legal representative entitled to have the sale set aside and to recover back the property on the ground that the decree being a nullity, the execution proceedings are void or is he estopped from doing so on the ground that he ought to have objected to the execution proceedings before the sale of the property? It has been held that the decree being a nullity, he is entitled to recover back the property and that he is not estopped from claiming back the property, for it was no duty of his to inform the decree holder that the proceedings adopted by him were illegal (r). Taking it then that the property sold can be claimed back, the question to be considered is, by what procedure is the property to be recovered, whether it is to be recovered by an application under this section or by a separate suit? According to an earlier decision of the Allahabad High Court, the legal representative is entitled to an order for restitution by an application under this section (s). According to a later decision of the same Court, he may bring a regular suit for the purpose (t). The earlier decision was not referred to in the later decision. According to a Full Bench ruling of the Patna High Court, the legal representative may challenge the decree in execution proceedings on the ground that it is a nullity (tt).

Note—In some of the cases cited above, it was contended that the provisions of § 244 of the Code of 1882, corresponding with this section, did not apply to questions arising subsequent to the execution of a decree, and since a claim for restitution could only arise after a decree has been completely executed, such claim should be made by a regular suit, and not by an application under this section. But this contention was overruled and it was held that this section applies to questions arising between the parties after the decree has been executed as much as to questions arising between them previous to execution (u). All that is necessary is that the question must be one relating to execution.

■ Proceedings for recovery of possession of property sold in execution—See notes, "Questions between the auction purchaser on the one hand and a party to the suit or his representative on the other hand," on p. 132 below.

■ Dispute between decree holder and judgment debtor as to amount of property actually attached—Where it is alleged by the judgment debtor that the decree holder in collusion with the Court peon had made away with the bulk of the property which had been attached and that only a small portion of the whole had been put up for sale, the matter is one which should be enquired into by the Court executing the decree under this section (v).

7 Second suit for redemption—See notes to § 11, "Finality of decree in redemption suits," p. 64 above.

8 Questions as to factum of adjustment of decree—A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 27,000. B applies to enter up satisfaction of the decree, alleging that the decree was adjusted by a writing in the nature of a compromise signed by A [O 21, r 2]. A alleges that the writing was obtained by fraud. The question is one relating to the discharge of the decree within the meaning of this section and it should be decided on A's application and not by a separate suit (w).

9 Substituted share—Where a decree gives a right to possession of a share in an imal mahal, which has prior to the date of the decree been partitioned under the Estates Partition Act (Beng. Act 5, 1897), the Court in proceedings for execution of the decree has power under this section to put the decree holder in possession of the specific land substituted for his share on partition (x).

10 Accretion to mortgaged property—The question whether certain property is an accretion to the mortgaged property is a question to be determined under this section in execution of a decree for redemption obtained by the mortgagor against the mortgagee (y).

11 Waste committed by judgment debtor after decree for possession—The question whether the judgment-debtor has committed waste, e.g., cut down trees, after a decree against him for possession, is one to be dealt with under this section, and not by a separate suit (z).

12 Decree for possession—Where a decree is passed for possession in a suit for pre-emption conditional on the plaintiff paying a specified sum of money within a time fixed by the Court, and the money is paid, but possession is not delivered to the plaintiff, his only remedy is by an application under this section. A suit for possession is barred under this section (a).

Separate suit will lie.—When it is said with reference to this section that a separate suit will lie, it is understood that either the question does not relate to the

"execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree, or that it does not arise between the parties to the suit or their representatives

I Where the question does not relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree —In such a case a separate suit will lie for the question not being one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, it cannot be determined in execution proceedings by the Court executing the decree. The following are the leading cases on the subject —

(1) Questions as to the validity of a decree —If a judgment debtor or his legal representative objects to the execution of a decree on the ground that the decree is not valid, the question as to the validity of the decree, not being one relating to the 'execution, discharge or satisfaction' of the decree, cannot be tried in execution proceedings under this section. Such a question can only be tried in a regular suit brought for the purpose (b). Thus if a judgment debtor objects to the execution of a decree on the ground that the decree was obtained by fraud, the question of the validity of the decree must be determined by a separate suit (c). The same rule applies where a reversioner objects to the attachment of his reversionary interest, on the ground that the decree obtained against the widow of the last male owner is not binding on him, there being no debt due by the last male owner (d). See notes to s 38, 'Powers of executing Court,' on p 120 above

(2) Agreement not to execute decree —A applies for execution of a decree obtained by him against B. B objects to execution on the ground that A had agreed prior to the decree not to execute the decree against him. A denies the agreement. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the question whether or not there was any such agreement between A and B is not a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree within the meaning of this section, and that B's only remedy is to bring a regular suit against A to restrain him by an injunction from executing the decree. The term "decree," according to that Court, means a decree which is susceptible and capable of execution and not a decree which is alleged by the judgment debtor to be a mere paper decree not to be executed (e). On the other hand it has been held by the High Courts of Bombay (f), Madras (g) and Allahabad (h), that the question as to the factum of such an agreement ought to be determined in execution under this section and not by a separate suit. Such an agreement is not obnoxious to O 21, r 2 as that rule relates to agreements after the passing of the decree (i).

(3) Uncertified payment or adjustment —A obtains a decree against B for Rs 2,000. It is subsequently agreed between A and B that A should accept Rs 1,000 in full satisfaction of the decree. B accordingly pays 1 Rs 1,000 but the adjustment is not certified to the Court as required by O 21 r 2. A then applies for execution of the decree. B objects to execution on the ground that the decree has already been satisfied. This objection cannot be entertained by the Court executing the decree, though it is a question relating to the satisfaction of the decree for an uncertified adjustment cannot be recognized by a Court in execution proceedings (see O 21 r 2). Nor can B institute

S. 47. a regular suit against A for a declaration that the decree has been satisfied and for an injunction restraining A from executing the decree Such a suit is barred under the present section, for the principal question in the suit will be whether the decree has been satisfied, and such a question being one relating to the "satisfaction" of the decree falls within the scope of this section. For the same reason, if B's property is sold in execution of the decree, he cannot bring a suit to set aside the sale on the ground that the decree has been adjusted and satisfied. But if the decree is executed, B may sue A for damages for breach of the contract. The question in such a suit is not a question relating to the "execution, satisfaction or discharge" of the decree, but whether A agreed to accept Rs. 1,000 in full satisfaction of the judgment debt, and, if so, what are the damages sustained by B by reason of the breach of the agreement. These questions are not within the scope of the present section, and hence a suit involving these questions is not barred under this section. The cases laying down the above propositions are cited in the notes to O 21, r 2, "Sub rule (3)". See also notes, "No 3 Questions as to factum of adjustment of decree" on p 130 above.

(4) Declaratory decree—A decree which merely declares the rights of parties and does not direct any act to be done is incapable of execution (j). Hence a separate suit will lie to enforce the rights declared by such a decree. In fact the only mode of enforcing such rights is by a regular suit. Thus if it be declared by a decree that the plaintiff is entitled to a monthly allowance, the decree is merely declaratory. Hence if the defendant fails to pay the allowance for any one month, the plaintiff's remedy is by suit, and not in execution under this section (k). But if the decree besides declaring the plaintiff's right to a monthly allowance, directs the defendant to pay the same from month to month to the plaintiff, the payment can only be enforced by proceedings in execution as often as default is made by the defendant, and a separate suit will not lie (l).

(5) Claim for contribution by one judgment debtor against another—A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs. 1,000. A executes the decree against B alone, and B pays the whole amount. B then sues C for contribution. The suit is not barred under this section, for the claim for contribution cannot be said to relate to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree as between the plaintiff and defendant within the meaning of this section (m). In fact the remedy by suit is the only remedy.

(6) Mal administration of estate of deceased judgment debtor—A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 20,000. B dies leaving a will of which C is the executor. Failing in his endeavour to execute the decree, A sues C for the administration of B's estate by the Court and for an account against C on the footing of mal administration. The suit is not barred by this section, in fact, the remedy by way of suit is the only remedy, for the Court cannot in execution proceedings go into the question of whether or not an executor has been guilty of mal administration of the estate (n).

(7) Previous redemption decree right to redeem reserved—Where a mortgagor is in effect bringing a suit to execute a previous redemption decree, the suit is barred under this section (o). But if the right to redeem was reserved to him by the decree in the previous suit, a fresh suit will lie for redemption (p).

Whether an objection not taken under this section may be taken in a subsequent suit—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an objection which ought to have been raised by a party to a suit in execution proceedings under this section, but which was not so raised, may be made a ground of defence in a subsequent suit between the same parties, where the latter suit is not barred under this section (g)

II Here the question, though relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, does not arise between the parties to the suit or their representatives.—In such a case, the question cannot be determined in execution proceedings under this section, and a suit will lie. A question is said to arise between “the parties to a suit or their representatives,” when it arises between the decree holder or his representative on the one hand and the judgment debtor or his representative on the other. Questions between decree holders inter se (r), or between judgment debtors inter se (s), or between a party and his own representative (t), are not questions arising between “the parties to the suit or their representatives” within the meaning of this section.

Stay of execution—The words “or to the stay of execution thereof,” which occurred in a 244 after the words “execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree” have been omitted in the present section. There are two possible views as regards the omission of these words. The one is that the words omitted may have been regarded as superfluous, for a plea that the execution of a decree may be stayed is equivalent to the plea that the decree should not be executed, and it is thus a question relating to the execution of the decree (u). The other view is that the said words having been deliberately omitted by the Legislature in the present section questions relating to the stay of execution are no longer within the section and no appeal lies from orders determining such questions (v). The latter view, it is submitted, is the correct view.

Sub section (2)—Court may treat suit as an application.—This sub section is new. It gives legislative recognition to the practice followed by the Courts under the repealed Code. It enables the Court to treat an application under this section as a suit or a suit as an application. Hence where a regular suit is instituted for the determination of a question which ought to be determined under this section by the Court executing the decree, the Court in which the suit is brought may either dismiss the suit as barred under this section or it may in its discretion regard the plaintiff in the suit as an application under this section and dispose of it accordingly, provided the Court in which the suit is brought has jurisdiction to execute the decree (w) and the execution of the decree was not barred at the date of the suit (x). Suppose now that a suit barred under this section is heard and disposed of as a suit, is the decree liable to be set aside in appeal on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit? It has been held that it is not, for the case is not one of absence of jurisdiction but of error of procedure [s. 99]. Hence if the decree be otherwise good in law the appellate Court may treat the plaintiff in the suit as an application in execution and the decree in the suit as an order under this section and it may uphold the decree provided the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to execute the original decree (y). But the suit in such a case must have been brought within the period of limitation appropriate to applications under this section, namely, the period prescribed by art. 181 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (z). It has been recently held by the High Court of Madras in a case

Parties to the suit—Explanation to the section—Under the old section it was held by the High Courts of Allahabad (b), and Calcutta (c), that a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed, and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed, cannot be considered as "parties to the suit" within the meaning of that section. On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Madras, that such plaintiff and such defendant must be regarded as "parties to the suit" (d). The Explanation to the section gives effect to the Madras decision.

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that a defendant against whom a suit is dismissed on the ground of misjoinder is not "a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed" within the meaning of the Explanation, and that he is not a party to the suit (e). But where a party has been properly impleaded as a defendant in a case, and the case as against him would have proceeded to judgment but for the fact that the plaintiff elected to abandon part of his case, and the suit was in consequence dismissed against such defendant, he is a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed" within the meaning of the Explanation and therefore a party to the suit (f).

Illustrations.

(1) A sues B and C. A decree is passed against B, but as against C the suit is dismissed. In execution of the decree against B, certain property is attached as belonging to B. C contends that the property belongs to him and claims to have it released from attachment. Here C is a 'party to the suit,' though the suit has been dismissed against him. He must therefore proceed by an application under this section, and not by a separate suit. A mere order for attachment will not entitle C to proceed under this section. There must be an actual attachment (g).

(2) A and B institute a suit against C, praying that the relief claimed in the suit may be granted to A, or in the alternative to B. A decree is passed in the suit awarding the relief claimed to A, and dismissing B's claim. Here B is a 'party to the suit,' though his suit has been dismissed.

(3) A mortgages his property to B. He then sells his equity of redemption to C. C sues B for redemption of the mortgage, and joins D who claims to be the owner of the property as a defendant to the suit. At the hearing, the suit is dismissed as against D on the ground of misjoinder, that is on the ground that he is not a proper party to the suit. D is not "a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed" within the meaning of the Explanation, and he is not a party to the suit (h).

As to whether a decree holder ceases to be a "party to the suit" by becoming the purchaser of the property of the judgment debtor at a sale held in execution of his decree, see notes "Execution purchaser," on p 136 below.

A minor (A2) or a lunatic (A3) not represented by a proper guardian ad litem, as where the guardian ad litem is a married woman, cannot be said to be a "party" to the suit within the meaning of this section.

"Representatives."—The term "representative" in this section includes not merely legal representative in the sense of heirs executors or administrators, but representative in interest, that is, any transferee of the decree holder's interest, or any transferee of the judgment debtor's interest, who so far as such interest is concerned is bound by the decree (i). We proceed to give illustrations —

(1) A transferee of a decree, or of the interest of any decree holder in a joint decree within the meaning of O 21, r 16 is a representative of the decree holder (j). A transferee from such transferee is also a representative of the decree holder (k).

A judgment creditor who attaches a decree held by the judgment debtor against another is a representative of the judgment debtor. A holds a decree against B. C obtains a decree against A, and in execution attaches the decree held by A against B. C is a representative of A in proceedings in execution of A's decree against B (l). See O 21, r 53 sub r 3.

(2) A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 5000. B then sells certain property belonging to him to C. C is not a representative of B for the decree is a simple money decree, and does not relate to the specific property sold to C (m).

(3) A purchaser lessee or mortgagee from a judgment debtor of property belonging to the judgment debtor and attached in execution of a decree against him is the representative of the judgment debtor within the meaning of this section, for the property being under attachment at the date of the purchase lease or mortgage the purchaser, lessee or mortgagee is bound by the decree so far as the interest transferred to him is concerned (n). See section 64.

(4) Purchaser of judgment debtor's equity of redemption under a private sale—A obtains a decree against B for sale of certain property mortgaged to him by B. After the date of the decree B sells his equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to C. C is a representative of B the judgment debtor for the property having been purchased after it was affected by B's mortgage decree. C is to that extent bound by A's decree. Hence any question relating to the execution of A's decree and arising between A and C must be determined by the Court executing A's decree and not by a separate suit (o). The same procedure would apply even if B had transferred his interest in the property to C during the pendency of the suit though before the passing of the decree (p).

(5) Purchaser of judgment debtor's equity of redemption at a judicial sale—A obtains a decree against B for the sale of certain property mortgaged to him by B. Before the property could be sold in execution of A's decree A who holds a money decree against B brings B's equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to sale in execution of his decree and the same is purchased by C. C is a representative of B the judgment debtor for the property having been purchased after it was affected by A's mortgage decree, C is to that extent bound by A's decree. Hence any question relating to the execution of A's decree, and arising between A and C must be determined by the Court executing A's decree and not by a separate suit (q).

questions may be divided into two classes according to the character of the parties between whom they arise —

A. Questions between the decree-holder on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other, the execution-purchaser being only interested in the result —

These questions being essentially questions between parties to the suit fall within the scope of this section. The fact that the auction purchaser (who was not a party to the suit) is interested in the result, does not prevent the questions being questions between parties. These questions therefore must be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. It has been so held in Prosurno Kumar v. Kali Das (y), which is the leading case on the subject. In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council said "It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of section 244 [now s. 47] and that, when a question has arisen as to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, the fact that the purchaser, who is no party to the suit, is interested in the result, has never been held a bar to the application of the section."

Illustrations

(a) A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is sold and purchased by C. B seeks to set aside the sale. B must proceed by an application and not by a regular suit. The mere fact that C, the auction purchaser, who was no party to the suit, is interested in the result of the application is no bar to the application of this section. Now B may seek to set aside the sale in execution proceedings—

- (1) on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, resulting in substantial injury [O 21, r 90], or
- (2) on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale resulting in substantial injury [O 21, r 90], or
- (3) on making the deposit required by O 21, r 89, or
- (4) on other grounds.

(1) If the sale is sought to be set aside by B on the first ground the application should be made under O 21, r 90

(2) If the sale is sought to be set aside by B on the second ground and this is what was sought to be done in Pioosunno Kumar v. Kals Das (2) and the under-mentioned cases (a), the application, in cases governed by this Code should also be made under O 21, r 90. Under the Code of 1882, the application would be exclusively one under s. 244 which corresponds to the present section.

(3) If the sale is sought to be set aside on the third ground, that is, on making the deposit required by O. 21, r. 89, the application should be made under that rule.

(4) If the sale is sought to be set aside by the judgment debtor on any other ground, and the question as to the legality of the sale is virtually one between him and the

47. decree holder, and also one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree [see illis (b) and (c) below], the application should be made under this section (c)

There is this difference between an application under this section and one under O 21, r 89 and 90, that while an order made on an application under this section operates as a decree [s 2, cl (2)], and is therefore open to a second appeal, an order made under O 21, r 92 on an application under O 21, r 89 and O 21, r 90, is appealable only as an order [O 49, r 1, cl (j)] and no second appeal lies from it [s. 104, sub s (2)] The object of the Legislature in transferring applications to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale from the present section to O 21, r 90, is to exclude a second appeal from orders made on such applications. See notes to O 21, r 89, "Appeal," and notes to O 21, r 90 "Fraud in publishing or conducting sale"

(b) A obtains a decree against B and applies for execution of the decree by attachment and sale of certain property belonging to B. An order is made for sale and the property is sold and purchased by C. B sues A and C to set aside the sale on the ground that the property was not liable to attachment and sale (see s 60). The suit is barred by the provisions of this section (d). The reason is that the question as to whether the property was saleable or not is really one between A and B, the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed. "It is well settled that as between the judgment debtor and the decree holder this is an objection which can only be taken in execution, and it is also well settled that the provisions of s 244 (now s 47) prohibit a suit by a party or his representatives against an auction purchaser to raise a question which as between the judgment debtor and the decree holder must have been determined under that section" (e). See notes to s. 60, 'Objection to attachment on the ground that the property is not saleable, when to be raised'

(c) A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is attached and proclaimed for sale. The decree is subsequently adjusted, but the adjustment is not certified to the Court as required by O 21, r 2 [Code of 1882, s 258]. The result is that the property is sold by the Court, and it is purchased by C. A and B sue C to set aside the sale, alleging that they had effected an adjustment of the decree, and that the sale was therefore illegal and unnecessary. The suit is barred under this section for the question whether the decree was adjusted as alleged is one between A, the decree holder, and B, the judgment debtor, that is, between the parties to the suit, though they are ranged on one side as plaintiffs (f)

B. Questions between the auction-purchaser on the one hand and a party to the suit or his representative on the other hand —

Cases under this head frequently arise between the auction purchaser on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other when the former seeks to recover from the latter possession of the property purchased by him. The question that arises in such cases is as regards the remedy of the auction-purchaser. Must he proceed by way of application under s 47 or is he entitled to bring a separate suit for possession? This depends on who is the purchaser, for the property may be purchased by the decree holder himself with the leave of the Court under O 21, r 72, or it may be purchased by a stranger. We shall deal with these two cases separately.

First, where the decree holder himself is the purchaser—Whether the purchaser must proceed by an application under s 47 coupled with O 21, r 9, or on the questions—(1) whether for the purpose of recovering possession of the property he is to be regarded as a 'party' to the suit within the meaning of s 47, or whether he has ceased to be a party to the suit by reason of his purchase, and (2) whether the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to "the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" within the meaning of s 47. Upon these points there is a conflict of decisions. According to the view taken by the High Court of Madras (f) and in some cases by the High Court of Calcutta (h), the decree holder is not a party to the suit though he is also the purchaser, and the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to "the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" within the meaning of s 47. The two conditions laid down in this section are therefore satisfied and he must proceed by an application under s 47 coupled with O 21, r 9, and a separate suit for possession is barred under s 47. The Madras Court of Madras has also held that the same procedure must be followed by a purchaser from a decree holder purchaser if he is resisted by the judgment debtor in obtaining possession the reason given being in one case (i) that a purchaser from a decree holder has purchased at a Court sale is a representative of the decree holder, and in another that he is a representative of the judgment debtor, within the meaning of this section. In two or three cases cited above, however, the Madras Court has held that this question had not already been settled by previous decisions of that Court, and would be disposed to hold that proceedings for obtaining possession could be maintained as those relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree, within the meaning of this section (l). In a recent Full Bench case it seems to have been held that such proceedings related to the execution of the decree (n). A similar view, which is the view taken by a Full Bench of each of the High Courts of Allahabad (o) Patna (p) and Bombay (q) and in a large majority of cases by the High Court of Calcutta (r) and in recent cases by the High Court of Lahore (s) a decree holder who stands on the same footing as a purchaser who is a stranger, and must proceed either by an application under O 21 r 9, or by a separate suit for possession. This view proceeds on the ground that the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree, within the meaning of s 47, and that even if it be so, a decree holder after he becomes a purchaser can no longer be said to be a party to the suit within the meaning of s 47, in other words s 47 does not apply to the case. In a recent case (t) of the Patna High Court took quite the opposite view on both points, and is inclined to think that s 47 does not apply to the case not because the purchaser is not a party to the suit within the meaning of s 47, but because such a party (r) but because the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree, within the meaning of s 47.

S. 47. to be a question 'relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree' within the meaning of s. 47. The following are the main points of distinction between the two views —

- (1) According to the former view, that is, the view taken by the High Court of Madras and in some cases by the High Court of Calcutta, a decree holder purchaser, who seeks to recover possession from the judgment debtor of the property purchased by him at the auction sale, can proceed only by an application under s. 47 coupled with O 21, r. 95. Such application must be made within 3 years from the date on which the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act Sch. I, art. 181]. According to the latter view, that is the view taken by the High Courts of Allahabad, Patna, Bombay and Lahore, and in a large majority of cases by the High Court of Calcutta he may proceed by an application under O 21, r. 95. If he does not so apply or if his application is unsuccessful, he may fall back upon his title and sue for possession. Such suit may be brought within 12 years from the date when the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch. I, art. 138], so that even if the time for an application under O 21, r. 95, has expired, he may prosecute his remedy by way of suit.
- (2) According to the former view, the application for delivery of possession falls under s. 47, and the order made on the application amounts to a decree [s. 2 (2)], and is appealable as such. According to the latter view, s. 47 does not apply to the case, and the application is entirely one under O 21, r. 95, and no appeal lies from an order made upon such application.

If the decree holder purchaser is obstructed in obtaining possession by the judgment debtor and a stranger to the suit, the case does not come within s. 47, and he may bring a suit for possession against them (s).

Secondly, where the purchaser is a stranger—We next proceed to consider the case where the property is purchased in execution of the decree by a stranger to the suit, and he is obstructed by the judgment debtor in obtaining possession. Must he proceed by an application under s. 47, or is he entitled to file a regular suit for possession? Here the person aggrieved is the purchaser, he was not a "party" to the suit, and the question as to delivery of possession is between the stranger purchaser on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other. Unless therefore it can be said that the stranger purchaser is the 'representative' of the decree holder, and the question as to delivery of possession can be said to be one relating to 'the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree,' the case cannot come within s. 47, and, if it does not, a separate suit will lie. The first question to be considered therefore is whether an auction purchaser who is a stranger can be said to be the 'representative' of the decree holder. It is clear that if he is not in law the "representative" of either party, the case is not one under s. 47. Further, if he is the "representative" of the judgment debtor, the case is equally not one under s. 47, for the question will then be one between the representative of the judgment debtor on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other. There is a conflict of opinion whether an auction purchaser who is a stranger is the "representative" of either party to the suit within the meaning of s. 47. This question is important not only in cases of the type now under consideration namely resistance to delivery of possession to the purchaser, but other cases which are dealt with later on in these notes. We proceed to summarize the result of the decisions. The High Court of Bombay has consistently held that an auction purchaser who is a stranger is not the representative of either party to the suit (i). The High Courts of Calcutta (u) and Allahabad (v) have held that he is not the representative of the "decree holder," but that he is the representative of the "judgment debtor." In Madras there is a hopeless conflict of opinion. The conflict was sought to be set at rest by a reference to a Full Bench in Vetindramuthu v. Maya Nadan (w), but it cannot be said that the object was attained. But the preponderance of authority in Madras seems to be in favour of the view that a purchaser at a Court sale who is a stranger is the representative of the "judgment debtor" for the purpose of inquiry into questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and not of the "decree holder." We give below in foot note (x) a list of cases in which it was held that he is not the representative of the "decree holder," and in foot note (y) cases in which the contrary was held. In the cases cited in foot note (z) it was held that he is the representative of the "judgment debtor," while the contrary was held in the cases cited in foot note (a). The High Court of Lahore has expressed the view that he is not the representative of the "judgment debtor" (b). It is worth while noting in this connection the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the undermentioned case (c).

All the High Courts (d) except the High Court of Madras, seem to be unanimous in holding that where an auction purchaser who is a stranger is resisted in obtaining possession by the judgment debtor of the property purchased by him in execution, he may apply for delivery of possession under O 21, r 95 or he may bring a regular suit for possession. The provisions of s 47 do not apply, either because he is not the "representative" of the decree holder or because the question as to delivery of possession is not one relating to "the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" within the meaning of the section. The period of limitation for an application under O 21, r 95, is 3 years from the date when the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act, 1908, Sec. 1, art. 181], and that for a suit is 12 years from the same date [ibid., art. 138]. He is entitled to bring the suit without making any application under O 21, r 95, and he may sue even if the application, if made, is unsuccessful. The High Court of Bombay has held that an auction purchaser, even though a benamidar for the decree holder, is a stranger for the purposes of this rule (e). In Madras the recent Full Bench decision in Vetindramuthu v. Maya Nadan (f), has been taken as an authority for the proposition that an auction purchaser, though he be a stranger, must proceed by an application under s 47, and that he is not entitled to bring a regular suit for possession. In the Order of Reference it was assumed that the question as to delivery of possession related to "the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" within the meaning of s 47. Further two out of the three learned judges who constituted the Full Bench [O. Field, J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J.] held that a stranger purchaser at a Court sale was not the "representative" of the decree holder, but that he was the "representative" of the judgment debtor. Abdur Rahim, C.J., said that whether

S 47. such a purchaser was to be regarded as the representative of the judgment debtor or of the decree holder depended on the nature of the question raised and who the contesting party was. On analysing the judgments delivered by the learned judges it will be seen that they were all influenced by the observations of the Lordships of the Privy Council in Prosunna Kumar's case cited on p. 137 above, namely 'It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and speedily as possible. But can it be done in a case where the question is directly one between the auction purchaser and the judgment debtor, unless the auction purchaser be regarded as the representative of the decree holder so as to bring the case within s. 47? The cases now under consideration are cases in which an auction purchaser to whom a certificate of sale is granted under O. 21 r. 94 seeks to obtain possession of the property comprised in the certificate from the judgment debtor. These cases are quite different from those where the question e.g. the legality of a Court sale, is one primarily between the judgment debtor and the decree holder and the purchaser is interested in the result of the decision within the meaning of the Privy Council decision.

We have hitherto dealt with cases relating to resistance by the judgment debtor to delivery of possession to the auction purchaser. We now proceed to deal with other cases in which questions arise between the auction purchaser on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other. The High Court of Allahabad has held that where property not included in the mortgage deed or in the mortgage decree is sold and delivered to a stranger purchaser in execution the judgment debtor is entitled to bring a suit against the auction purchaser for recovery of the property and that the provisions of s. 47 do not apply to the case (9). In a Madras case however it was held that such a case comes within s. 47 and that a regular suit is barred (1). A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that an auction purchaser under a decree which has been after confirmation of the sale set aside as a result of a separate suit is entitled to apply under s. 47 for recovery of the purchase money from the decree holder (2).

Sub-sec. (3) Inquiry as to who is the representative of a party—A obtains a decree against B. B dies before the decree is fully executed and C is brought on the record as B's legal representative under s. 50. D claims to be the legal representative of B. Under the Code of 1882 it was competent to the Court under these circumstances either to stay execution of the decree until the question as to who is the representative of B was determined by a separate suit or itself to determine the question. The present section makes it obligatory upon the Court executing the decree itself to determine the question (3). The same procedure is to be followed when a question arises in execution proceedings as to whether a certain person is a transferee of a decree for a transferee of a decree is as stated above a representative of a party within the meaning of this section. An order determining whether a certain person is or is not the representative of a party in a decree [see s. 50 cl. (2)] and is therefore appealable (4).

Objection by party or his representative that property attached is not liable to attachment—All objections to attachment raised by a party to the suit in which the decree was passed or his representative come under this section. But objections to attachment raised by a third party come under O. 21 r. 58 [Code of 1882 s. 278]. The distinction is important for an order under this section being a decree [see 2 (2)] is appealable while an order under O. 21 r. 58 is not appealable. Moreover if the objection falls under this section a separate suit is barred but if it falls under

O. 21, r. 58, a separate suit is not barred. If property in the possession of a judgment-debtor is attached, and the judgment debtor objects to the attachment on the ground that the property is not "saleable" within the meaning of s. 60, and should not therefore be attached, as where it is a service vatan or an occupancy holding, the objection is one under this section, for it is made by a party to the suit (l). But if the judgment debtor objects to the attachment on the ground that he holds it in behalf of a third party, e.g., as a trustee, the objection comes under O. 21, r. 58 (m). Similarly where property is attached in execution of a decree passed against a sebast personally, and the sebast objects that the property does not belong to him but that it is held by him as sebast of an idol, or that it is waqf property, the objection falls under s. 21, r. 58, and not under this section (n).

A mortgages two properties X and Y to B. He then executes a second mortgage of property X to C. B sues A and C on his mortgage, and both the properties are ordered to be sold. C objects to the sale of property Y alleging that after it was mortgaged to B, he (C) purchased it at a revenue sale and that the effect of that sale was to annul the mortgage of that property to B. Here C was joined as a party to the suit as a puerne mortgagee, while the objection taken by him to the sale of property of Y is taken in quite a different character, namely, as one claiming by title paramount adversely both to the mortgagor (A) and the mortgagee (B). Such an objection is not one by a "party to the suit" within the meaning of this section, and no appeal therefore lies from an order made on his objection (c). See notes to O 34, r 1. "Persons having an interest, etc."

As regards objections to attachment by the legal representative of a deceased judgment debtor, it has been held that if property in the hands of a legal representative is attached, and the legal representative objects to the attachment on the ground that the property attached is his own property, and does not form part of the estate of the deceased judgment debtor the objection is one under this section, for it is made by a representative of a party to the suit (p). But if the legal representative objects to the attachment on the ground that he holds the property on behalf of a third party, the objection is one under (1) 21, r. 58 (a).

Where a decree is passed against the karnatan of a tarwad in his representative capacity [s 11, Explan vi], all the members of the tarwad must be held to be parties to the suit. Hence if a decree is passed against a karnatan in his representative capacity, and the tarwad property is attached in execution of the decree, and a member of the tarwad objects to the execution alleging that the property belongs not to the tarwad, but to him individually, the question is one between the parties to the suit within the meaning of this section, and the objection therefore is one under this section, and not under O 21, r 39 (r). See notes to s 11 under the head: Representative suit, p 51 ante.

- S. 47. did not pass his interest in the property, but the father's interest only, it was held that the son being a party to the suit in which the decree was passed could have raised the question before the sale was confirmed and that the suit was barred by the provisions of this section (v)

Where a sale is sought to be set aside on the ground that the "decree" was obtained by fraud—It has been stated above that where a sale is sought to be set aside on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale, the parties must proceed by an application under O 21, r 90, and not by a separate suit [see p 137, ill (a)] A suit, however, will lie to set aside a sale if the decree which resulted in the sale was obtained by fraud. The following are the leading cases on the subject —

1 A suit will lie to set aside a decree and a sale held in execution of the decree, where both the decree and sale are impeached on the ground of fraud (i). The reason is that the question of the validity of a decree can only be determined by a regular suit. See ill (1) under the head Separate suit will lie, p 130 above.

2 A obtains an ex parte decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is sold and purchased by C. The decree is then set aside under O 9, r 13. B thereafter sues A and C to set aside the sale, challenging not only the sale, but also the decree, on the ground of fraud. Is the suit barred under this section? No, for B is entitled to show that the decree was obtained by fraud, and this can only be done in a regular suit (u).

Appeal—On referring to the definition of 'decree' given in § 2 above it will be seen that an order determining any question within this section is a "decree." Hence an appeal lies from all orders under this section and also a second appeal (s 100). It is important to note that all orders in execution proceedings are not appealable. As regards appeal, orders in execution proceedings may be divided into two classes —

- (1) Orders under this section. [An appeal lies from these orders and also a second appeal.]
- (2) Other orders in execution proceedings. These may again be subdivided into two classes
 - (a) those which are declared appealable under s 104, and
 - (b) those which are not so declared, and are therefore non appealable.

Where an order is made in execution proceedings and the order is non appealable, attempts are frequently made by the party against whom the order is made to show that the order comes under this section and is therefore appealable (t). Similarly where an order is made in execution proceedings and the order is appealable under s 104 attempts are frequently made by the party against whom the order is made to show that the order comes under this section to enable the party to prefer a second appeal (w). It will thus be seen that this section is important not only as regards the question whether a separate suit will lie, but also as regards the question of appeal.

Interlocutory orders in execution proceedings—It may here be observed that a party is not bound to prefer an appeal from every order in execution proceedings though the order is appealable. It is open to the party aggrieved to challenge by an appeal against the final order which determines the rights of the parties the propriety of interlocutory orders made in the course of execution proceedings (x)

It must be noted that it is not every order made in execution of a decree that comes within this section, if that were so, every interlocutory order in an execution proceeding, such as an order granting or refusing process for the examination of witnesses, would be appealable. An order in execution proceedings can come under s 47 only when it conclusively determines some question relating to the rights and liabilities of parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree, not when it determines merely an incidental question as to whether the proceedings are to be conducted in a certain way. This follows from the definition of "decree" in s 2 (2) (y). See notes to O. 21, r 66, = Appeal

Limitation—An application under this section to set aside a sale in execution of a decree must be made within 30 days from the date of the sale. [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch I art 166] But if the sale is void, as where no notice is given as required by O 21, r 22, it is not necessary to apply to the Court to set aside the sale, hence the article applicable in such a case is the residuary art 181 which provides a period of 3 years from the date when the right to apply accrues, and not art 166 (z). An application under this section by a representative of a judgment debtor to set aside a sale on the ground that the property sold belongs to him and not to the deceased judgment debtor is governed by art 166, and must be made within 30 days from the date of sale (a)

LIMIT OF TIME FOR EXECUTION.

48. [S. 230, 3rd and 4th paras] (1) Where an application to execute a decree not being a decree granting an injunction has been made, no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of 12 years from—

- (a) the date of the decree sought to be executed, or,
- (b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money or the delivery of any property to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods, the date of the default in making the payment or delivery in respect of which the applicant seeks to execute the decree.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

- (a) to preclude the Court from ordering the execution of a decree upon an application presented after the expiration of the said term of twelve years, where the judgment-debtor has, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application ; or

- (b) to limit or otherwise affect the operation of article 180 of the second schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877.

Changes made in the section.—This section corresponds with the third and fourth paras of s 230 of the Code of 1882 (of which the provisions have been set forth below) except in the following particulars —

- (1) The provisions of s 230 applied only to decrees ‘for the payment of money or delivery of other property’ The present section applies to all decrees except decrees granting an injunction
- (2) The provisions of s 230 applied only where an application for execution had been made “under this section and granted” The words “under this section” as also the words “and granted” have been omitted in the present section The result is that the rule of limitation contained in this section applies whether the previous application for execution was made under this section or not, and whether the application was granted or not See notes below, “Orders an application for execution”
- (3) The words “or the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same,” which occurred in s 230, cl. (a), after the words, “the date of the decree sought to be enforced” have been omitted in this section On a proper construction of that section, those words were quite unnecessary See notes below, “Date of decree sought to be executed”
- (4) The words ‘or at recurring periods’ in sub section (1), cl. (b), are new. They are intended to give effect to certain decisions under s 230 of the Code of 1882 See notes below, “Where payment is directed to be made at recurring periods”
- (5) Clause (b) of sub section (2) is new It gives effect to certain decisions under s 230 of the Code of 1882 See notes below, “Successive applications for execution of decrees of Chartered High Courts”

Civil Procedure Code, 1882, section 230, third and fourth paras.—In view of the several alterations made in s 230 of the Code of 1882, we give below the provisions of that section, indicating in italics the words that have been omitted in the present section —

“Where an application to execute a decree for the payment of money or delivery of other property has been made under this section and granted, no subsequent application to execute the same decree shall be granted after the expiration of twelve years from any of the following dates (namely) —

- (a) the date of the decree sought to be enforced, or of the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same, or
- (b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money, or the delivery of any property, to be made at a certain date—the date of the default in making the payment or delivering the property in respect of which the applicant seeks to enforce the decree

Nothing in this section shall prevent the Court from granting an application for execution of a decree after the expiration of the said term of twelve years where the judgment debtor has, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application.

Successive applications for execution of decrees of Courts other than Chartered High Courts—This section deals with the maximum limit of time for execution; it does not prescribe the period within which each application for execution is to be made (b).

What is stated in this paragraph is confined to applications for execution of decrees of Courts other than Chartered High Courts. A decree holder is entitled to present in succession any number of applications for execution of the same decree (c) and the Court has no power to refuse execution, unless—

- (i) the application is barred by virtue of general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata, or
- (ii) the application is barred under art 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908, or
- (iii) the execution of the decree is barred under sub section (1) of the present section (d), though the application for execution may not be barred under cl (i) or cl (ii) above

Clause (i)—Thus if the first application for execution is dismissed after a hearing on the merits, the Court will not, having regard to the general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata, entertain a subsequent application for execution of the same decree (e). See notes to § 11, “Orders in execution proceedings, etc,” p 68 above.

Clause (ii)—Though an application for execution may not be barred as res judicata, the Court will not entertain it if it is barred under art 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908. Leaving out of consideration certain portions of that article, the rule of limitation set forth in that article may be stated thus: the first application for execution must be made within three years from the date of the decree sought to be executed, and every successive application for execution of the same decree must be made within three years from the date of the last application. By this process a decree may be kept alive for any number of years. To this a limit has been set by the rule contained in the present section which is considered in the next clause.

Clause (iii)—Though an application for execution of a decree may not be barred as res judicata or under art 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908, no order shall be made for execution of the decree, if the application is presented after the expiration of twelve years (1) from the date of the decree or (2) from the date fixed by the decree for the payment of money or for the delivery of any property under the decree (f). A obtains a decree against B for Rs 1,000 on 1st January 1910 and applies for execution of the decree within three years from the date of the decree. Further applications are made for execution of the same decree each within a period of three years from the date of the next preceding application, and the last of these is made in December 1921. A then makes a fresh application for execution on 1st January 1924. No order can be made for execution of the decree, for though the application is not barred under the Limitation Act, it is barred under this section as it is made twelve years after the date of the decree.

[Note—Under section 230 of the Code of 1882 the twelve years limitation did not apply unless one at least of the applications prior to that made on 1st January 1924 had been granted by the Court. If none of the applications was granted, the rule did not apply. But the words “and granted,” which occurred in that section, have now been omitted, and it is no longer material to inquire whether any one of the previous applications was granted by the Court.]

Where payment is directed to be made "at a certain date"—If in the case put above, the decree had directed payment of Rs 1,000 to be made at a certain date, for instance, on 1st March 1910, the period of twelve years would run from that date. See sub section (1), cl (b)

If here payment is directed to be made at 'recurring periods'—The words "at recurring periods" have been added into the section to give effect to decisions under s 230 of the Code of 1882. In fact, these words were read into that section in the undermentioned cases (g). Thus if a decree, dated 1st January 1913, directs payments to be made annually, but no dates are specified, the first yearly payment will fall due on 1st January 1914 the second on 1st January 1915, and thenceforward on the corresponding date year after year. Hence the period of twelve years prescribed by this section will run as regards the application to enforce the first yearly payment, from 1st January 1914, as regards the application to enforce the second yearly payment, from 1st January 1915, and so forth and the decree holder is at liberty to execute for the instalments as they fall due. But if it is further provided by the decree that on default in payment of any one instalment the whole decree shall become payable at once the decree ceases to be an instalment decree, and the decree holder must apply for execution of the whole of the balance due within 12 years from the date of default (h).

If here payment is directed to be made on the happening of a contingency—In such a case the period of 12 years provided by this section is to be computed from the date when the contingency happens (for until then the decree is not capable of execution) and not from the date of the decree (i).

Successive applications for execution of decrees of Chartered High Courts—The holder of a decree of a Chartered High Court passed in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction is entitled to present in succession any number of applications for execution of the decree, and the Court is bound to entertain them, unless the application is barred—

- (i) by virtue of general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata, or
- (ii) under art 180 of the Limitation Act 1877 (now art 183 of the Limitation Act 1908) that being the article which applies to decrees of Chartered High Courts.

It will be observed that cl (iii) which occurs in the preceding paragraph does not occur here. The reason is that the twelve years rule laid down in this section does not limit or otherwise affect the operation of art 183 of the Limitation Act 1908, as it does that of art 182. In other words the said rule does not apply to decrees passed by Chartered High Courts. It was so held under the Code of 1882 (j). The same is now expressly enacted by sub section (2) clause (b). Hence a decree of a Chartered High Court may be kept alive for any number of years. The same rule applies to Orders in Council made on appeal to the Privy Council (k). [The period of limitation for an application for execution of a decree of a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction as distinguished from appellate civil jurisdiction (l) is twelve years from the several dates specified in art 183 of the Limitation Act, 1908.]

"Date of decree sought to be executed"—The law is that it is only the final decree that can be executed [see notes to s. 36, "What decrees may be executed," on p. 115 above]. Hence if the decree sought to be executed is a decree of a Court of first instance, the period of twelve years prescribed by this section runs from the date of that decree. And if the decree sought to be executed is an appellate decree, that period runs from the date of the appellate decree, whether the original decree is affirmed, or whether it is set aside or modified, on appeal (t), the same rule applies though the appeal is dismissed on the ground that no appeal lies (u). The words "or of the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same" which occurred in cl. (a) of s. 230 of the Code of 1892 have been omitted as being unnecessary and calculated to give rise to the contention, by reason of the word 'affirmed,' that where the original decree was modified or set aside on appeal, the period of twelve years was to run from date of the original decree. On the same principle, where a decree is passed in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant, and part of the decree is appealed from and the rest is not, the period of 12 years prescribed by this section runs from the date of the appellate decree both as regards the application to execute the portion appealed from and the portion not appealed from. The reason is that there is only one decree that can be executed, and that is the decree of the Appellate Court (s). But where a decree is passed not jointly, but severally against two or more defendants, and one of the defendants appeals from the decree, the period of 12 years as against the other defendants is to be computed from the date of the original decree (w), while as against the appellant defendant it is to be computed from the date of the appellate decree. Where a second appeal is preferred to the High Court from a decree passed in first appeal, and an order is made by the High Court declaring the appeal before it to have abated, the period of twelve years under this section runs from the date of that order, and not from the date on which the decree was passed in first appeal (x).

By a decree dated 17th November 1897 the defendant is directed inter alia to pay Rs. 6,000 forthwith to the plaintiff. On 28th January 1899 the decree is amended in some other respects. Several applications for execution are made and the decree is thus kept alive. On 2nd December, 1909, that is, more than 12 years after the date of the original decree, but within 12 years from the date of the amended decree, the plaintiff applies for execution. The sum of Rs. 6,000 being directed by the original decree to be paid forthwith, the period of 12 years is to be computed from the date of the original decree, and the application is barred so far as it relates to that sum (y).

Where a decree directs payment on the happening of a certain contingency, the period of twelve years provided by this section is to be computed from the date when the contingency happens, and not the date of the decree (z).

As to the operation of this section on applications for an order absolute under s. 80 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 [now O. 34, r. 5], see the undermentioned case (a).

"Fresh application presented after the expiration of twelve years."
—These words make it quite clear that all that the section requires is the presentation of the fresh application within twelve years from the date of the decree. The order on the fresh application may be made after the expiration of twelve years. The section does not preclude the Court from making an order for execution after the expiration of twelve years, if the application was presented within that period. In fact, it was so held by the High Court of Madras under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 (b)

"Decree not being a decree granting an injunction —The operation of the twelve years rule laid down in this section is now extended to all decrees except decrees granting an injunction. Under s 230 of the Code of 1882 the rule was confined to decrees for the payment of money and decrees for the delivery of other property. Under that section the question was raised whether a mortgage decree was a decree for the payment of money, and the decisions were not uniform. The present section applies to money decrees as well as mortgage decrees in fact to all decrees except decrees granting an injunction (c)

= Subsequent order. —It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the expression subsequent order in sub sec (1), cl (b) means a subsequent order made by the Court which passed the decree and acting as such Court and not an order of a Court executing a decree. Thus an order under O 20 r 11 (2) is a subsequent order within the meaning of cl. (b) but not an order made by a Court executing a decree allowing time to the judgment debtor for payment of the decretal amount (d). On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Bombay that an order made even by an executing Court is a subsequent order within the meaning of this section (dd)

"Payment to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods" —See notes above under the head Successive applications for execution of decrees of Courts other than Chartered High Courts

Whether section retrospective —1 obtains a mortgage decree against B in 1900 that is, before the present Code came into force. A applies for execution of the decree from time to time and the last of such applications is made in 1914 that is more than 12 years after the date of the decree. Is execution of the decree barred under this section regard being had to the fact that the old section did not apply to mortgage decrees though the present section does? No according to the Allahabad High Court the reason given being that this section is not retrospective (e). Yes according to the Calcutta (f) Bombay (g) and Patna (h) High Courts the reason given being that the present section applies to mortgage decrees and an application made in 1914 must be deemed to have been made under the present Code. The latter view it is submitted is correct.

Fraud —Fraud or force on the part of a judgment debtor at any stage of the execution gives a new starting point for the period of limitation (i). The word 'fraud' in this section should not be narrowly interpreted (j). The fraud dealt with by this section is such as prevents the execution of the decree within twelve years and judges ought to take a broad view of conduct deliberately adopted by judgment debtors with a view to defeating and delaying the just payment of their debts by frivolous and futile objections which are dishonest upon the face of them (k). Locking up the house so as to prevent attachment of moveable property (l) or evading arrears by any contrivance or dishonestly evading payment by eluding service of warrant (m) is fraud within

S. 48. the meaning of this section. Similarly a fictitious transfer of his property made by a judgment debtor to defeat or delay the execution of decrees that may be passed against him amounts to "fraud" within the meaning of this section (n). The presentation by a judgment debtor of an application to set aside a decree passed ex parte against him, the sole object of the application being to delay the proceedings in execution of the decree, is "fraud" within the meaning of this section (o). But though the Court has the power to grant execution after the expiration of twelve years from the date of the decree on the ground of fraud or force on the part of the judgment debtor, the Court should not use that power unless it is satisfied that the decree holder on his part had been diligent in proceeding with execution since the date of the decree (p). It is doubtful whether the fraud of one of several judgment debtors keeps the decree alive against all of them (q).

Limitation Act, sec. 15 (1)—Sec. 15 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1908, cannot be applied in computing the period of 12 years prescribed by the present section (r).

Minority—A decree is passed in August 1897 on behalf of a minor in a suit brought by his guardian for partition and mesne profits. Various applications for execution are made by the minor through his guardian within 3 years of each other. The period of 12 years prescribed by this section expires in August 1909. The minor attains majority in November 1909, and in November 1910 he applies for execution of the decree, alleging that he is entitled to an extension of the period on the ground of minority. Is he entitled to any extension either under sec. 6 of the Limitation Act, 1908, or under any other law? It has been held by the High Court of Madras that he is not entitled to any extension under sec. 6, on the ground that that section is expressly limited to cases where the limitation is provided in the Limitation Act itself, and, further, that there is no law apart from the said sec. 6 under which minority is a ground of exemption from the operation of the law of limitation (s). The High Court of Bombay agrees with the Madras High Court in holding that sec. 6 of the Limitation Act applies only to cases dealt with by the Act itself, but differs from that Court in that it holds that the minor is entitled to an extension of the period under the general principle of law which is that time does not run against a minor (t). But it has been held by the same Court that where the decree has been obtained in the first instance by an adult, the fact that the decree on his death passes to an heir who is a minor does not extend the period of 12 years prescribed by the present section (u). In the last mentioned case it was assumed that the provisions of the Limitation Act applied to the case, but it was held that time

Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act 17 of 1879.—In computing the period of 12 years provided by this section, the time taken up in procuring a consolidator's certificate as required by the D A R Act is to be excluded (v). A decree for sale on a mortgage passed under that Act does not require to be made absolute; hence the period of 12 years is to be computed from the date of the decree, and not from the date of the order making the decree absolute (x).

(2) Where the decree is executed against such legal representative, he shall be liable only to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his hands and has not been duly disposed of, and, for the purpose of ascertaining such liability, the Court executing the decree may, of its own motion or on the application of the decree holder, compel such legal representative to produce such accounts as it thinks fit

Changes introduced by the section—The present section differs from the corresponding section 234 of P. C. 1892 in one respect, viz. that the words 'fully satisfied' have been substituted for the words 'fully executed'. See notes below under the head: Before the decree has been fully satisfied

Extent of liability of legal representative—This section enables a decree holder to execute his decree against the legal representative of a deceased judgment debtor. The liability of a legal representative in execution proceedings is confined to the property of the deceased which has actually come to his hands. If the decree holder seeks to make the legal representative answerable also for the property of the deceased which with due diligence on his part would have come to his hands, his proper remedy is by way of suit against the legal representative, and not by proceedings in execution under this section (b).

A decree holder is entitled under this section to have the amount of the decree paid out of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative which have not yet been duly disposed of. Hence the legal representative is bound to pay to the decree-holder the full amount of the decree, though there may be other creditors of the deceased, and the assets may not be sufficient to pay them all in full (c).

Legal representative.—"Legal representative" means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased [see s 2, cl (11)]. Thus where a judgment debtor dies and a stranger takes possession of his property, the decree may be executed against the stranger, for he is a 'legal representative' within the meaning of this section (d). Similarly where upon the death of a judgment debtor possession of his property is taken by a residuary legatee under his will, and such legatee applies for letters of administration with the will annexed, the decree may be executed against him, though letters of administration may not have been granted to him on the date of the order for execution. The reason is that a residuary legatee in possession of the estate of the deceased, who has applied for letters of administration with the will annexed, is a "legal representative" within the meaning of this section (e). The purchaser of the business of a firm against which a decree has been passed is not the "legal representative" of the firm within the meaning of this section. The decree against the firm cannot therefore be executed against the purchaser (f).

"Before the decree has been fully satisfied."—The corresponding section of the Code of 1882 (s 234) provided in effect that if a judgment debtor died before the decree had been "fully executed," his legal representative should be brought on the record before the proceedings in execution were carried any further. This gave rise to the question, when a decree can be said to be 'fully executed'. It was held by the High Court of Madras that a decree could not be said to be "fully executed" until the property attached was sold, and that if the judgment debtor died before sale his legal representative ought to be brought on the record, and if the property was sold without the legal representative being brought on the record, the sale should be set aside (g). On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that once the property was attached, the decree was "fully executed" and the property could be sold without the legal representative being brought on the record. The latter decisions were based on the ground that once a property was attached, it was in the hands of the law, and the attachment did not abate on the death of the judgment debtor (h).

It was to remove this conflict of decisions that the word "satisfied" has been substituted in the present section for the word 'executed'. The section provides in effect that if a judgment debtor dies before the decree has been fully satisfied, his legal representative ought to be brought on the record before the proceedings in execution are carried further. It is clear that mere attachment of the property of a judgment debtor does not amount to satisfaction of the decree. Therefore, if the judgment debtor dies during the pendency of the attachment, the property cannot be sold unless his legal representative is brought on the record. The Allahabad decisions, therefore, are no longer law. If the property is sold without bringing the legal representative on the record, the sale is void as held by the Madras High Court (h2).

"May apply to execute the decree against the legal representative."—

This does not mean that when a judgment debtor dies after execution proceedings have been commenced against him the decree holder must present a fresh application for execution against his legal representative under the provisions of O 21, r 11. All that is necessary is to apply to the Court which passed the decree for liberty to continue the execution proceedings against the legal representative by substituting the name of the legal representative for that of the judgment debtor in the application for execution already on the files of the Court (i). See O 21, r 22 and O 22, r 12.

The application for execution against a legal representative must be made to the Court which passed the decree.—If a judgment debtor dies after the decree is sent for execution by the Court which passed it to another Court, should the application for execution against the legal representative be made to the Court which passed the decree, or can it be made to the Court to which the decree has been sent for execution? It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay (j) Allahabad (k) and Madras (l) that the application for execution in such a case must be made to the Court which passed the decree, and that the Court to which the decree is sent for execution is not competent to entertain the application and make an order of execution against the legal representative. If such an order is made by that Court, the same will be set aside. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an application for execution may be made in such a case to the Court to which the decree is sent for execution (m).

Successive deaths of judgment-debtor and his legal representative.—If the legal representative of a judgment debtor against whom execution has been taken out under this section dies before the decree has been fully executed, the decree holder may execute the decree against his legal representative to the extent of the assets of the original judgment debtor that may have come into the hands of such legal representative (n).

Orders passed in the lifetime of the deceased.—The legal representative is bound by orders passed in execution against the deceased judgment debtor. A obtains a decree against B. A then transfers the decree to C. C applies for execution against B, and an order is made for execution after notice to A and B as provided by O 21, r 16 [Code of 1882, s. 232]. A then dies and his legal representative D is brought on the record under this section. The order for execution having been passed in A's lifetime, D cannot object to execution on the ground that the transfer to C was fraudulent (o).

Decree for injunction.—An injunction obtained against a defendant restraining the latter from obstructing the access of light and air to certain windows may, on the death of the defendant, be enforced under this section against his son as his legal representative by procedure under O 21, r 32 [Code of 1882, s. 260] (p). injunction cannot be enforced under this section against a purchaser of the property from the defendant, for an injunction does not run with the land. The remedy of the decree holder is to bring a fresh suit for an injunction against the purchaser (q). PROCEDURE IN EXECUTION

Powers of Court to enforce execution

51. [New] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Court may, on the application of the decree holder, order execution of the decree—

- (a) by delivery of any property specifically decreed ;
- (b) by attachment and sale or by sale without attachment of any property ,
- (c) by arrest and detention in prison
- (d) by appointing a receiver , or
- (e) in such other manner as the nature of the relief granted may require.

Receiver in execution proceedings—A receiver may be appointed to realize a decree attached in execution proceedings. A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree A attaches a decree held by B against C (O 21 r 53). The Court may appoint a receiver to realize the attached decree if that course is likely to benefit the parties more than the sale of the attached decree (r). Similarly a receiver may be appointed to realize a debt attached in execution of a decree (s). See notes to O 21, r 46 Procedure where garnishee denies debt. But the Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of the future earnings of a judgment debtor (t). The Privy Council has held that though a right to future maintenance cannot be attached [s 60 (1) (n)] the Court may in a fitting case e.g., where provision is made for maintenance out of the income of several villages appoint a receiver for realizing the rents, and paying out of the same a sufficient sum for maintenance and the balance to the decree holder (u).

A obtains a decree against B. By consent of parties C is appointed receiver to take charge of certain properties for the execution of the decree. A then applies to the Court for the discharge of C as receiver but the application is refused. The order is one relating to execution within the meaning of s 47, and is therefore appealable (v).

Clause (p).—This clause does not authorize a Court to read into a decree a supplementary or alternative relief which is not in the decree. Thus where a decree in a suit for redemption directs the defendant mortgagee to deliver to the plaintiff mortgagor the documents of title relating to the mortgaged property, but does not provide an alternative relief namely, payment of damages the Court has no power under this clause to grant such relief in execution (w). The suit could have been decided on the simple ground that a Court executing a decree has no power to add to the terms of a decree

52. [S. 252] (1) Where a decree is passed against a party as the legal representative of a deceased person, and the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased it may be executed by the attachment and sale of any such property

Enforcement of decree against legal representative

(2) Where no such property remains in the possession of the judgment debtor and he fails to satisfy the Court that he has duly applied such property of the deceased as is proved to have come into his possession the decree may be executed against the judgment debtor to the extent of the property in respect of which he has failed so to satisfy the Court in the same manner as if the decree had been against him personally

Scope of the section—Section 50 provides for the case where a decree has been passed against a party and the party dies before the decree is fully satisfied and the decree is sought to be executed against his legal representative. The present section provides for the case where a decree is passed against the legal representative of a deceased person. As to the latter case it is provided by this section that if the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased the decree may be executed against the property of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative. But in far as the property of the deceased come into the hands of the legal representative has not been duly applied by him the decree may be executed against the legal representative as if the decree was to that extent passed against him personally. In other words the legal representative can be proceeded against personally to the extent only to which he has failed to apply the assets fully. An executor or administrator under the Indian Succession Act 1925 s 323 is bound to pay the creditors of the deceased equally and rateably. If an executor or administrator under that Act fails to pay the debts rateably a creditor of a deceased person who has obtained a decree against his executor or administrator is entitled to proceed against him personally on the ground that the property of the deceased has not been duly applied within the meaning of this section. But the case is different where a decree has been obtained against an heir of a deceased Hindu or Mahomedan as his legal representative. In such a case every payment by the heir or account of debt due by the deceased would be a due application of the assets whether the debts were paid rateably or not. There is an analogy between the case of an executor and one governed by the provisions of the Indian Succession Act and an heir as a legal representative under the Hindu or Mahomedan law (r).

Legal representative Legal representative means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person and include any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased and where a party takes or sues in a representative character the person and the estate law he in the death of the party or survivor. See s 2 (11)

Where on the death of a Hindu father his sons are brought on the record as his legal representatives in a suit pending against him at the time of his death the decree should be against them in their representative capacity, and not against them personally. It is clear that where the decree is against the sons in their representative character it can only be executed against the estate of the father in the hands of the sons as provided by this section (y)

Out of the property of the deceased—The expression 'property' includes the income of immoveable property though it cannot be both attached and sold (z)

Decree against a wrong person as heir and legal representative—A decree obtained against an executor or administrator of the estate of a deceased person is a decree against the estate of the deceased. But a decree obtained against the heir of a deceased Hindu or Mahomedan as his legal representative is not a decree against the estate of the deceased even if the decree provides for the payment of the decretal amount out of the property of the deceased in the hands of such heir. Therefore, a decree obtained by a creditor of a deceased Hindu against a wrong person as his heir cannot be executed against the rightful heir who is in possession of the property. The creditor must obtain a fresh decree against the rightful heir (a)

Decree against executor who has not proved—A creditor of a deceased debtor cannot sue a person named as executor in the will of the deceased unless he has either administered that is intermeddled with the estate or proved the will. Where a decree is obtained against such person, and property belonging to the deceased is sold under such a decree the sale is ineffectual to bind the testator's estate (b)

53. [New] For the purposes of section 50 and section 52, property in the hands of a son or other descendant which is liable under Hindu law for the payment of the debt of a deceased ancestor, in respect of which a decree has been passed, shall be deemed to be property of the deceased which has come to the hands of the son or other descendant as his legal representative

Scope of the section—This section has been enacted to enforce the recognized rule of the Hindu law namely that members of a joint Hindu family may not escape the payment out of the joint family property of any debt incurred and decreed against the father before his death provided that such debt is not tainted by immorality. The section does not apply where the joint family property passes by survivorship to a collateral e.g. a nephew as he is under no obligation to pay his uncle's debts (c)

"Decree"—It has been held by the High Court of Madras that the expression 'decree' in this section is not confined to money decrees but includes also a decree obtained against a Hindu father for possession of joint family property which the father could sell and which is liable to be sold for his debts (d). This decision seems to be of doubtful authority. However that may be the word 'decree' in this section does not include a decree for an injunction obtained against the father restraining him from obstructing the plaintiff from using a water tank, such a decree cannot, after the father's death, be enforced in execution against the sons (c)

Liability of ancestral property in execution proceedings.—This section is new. It settles a question of procedure on which there was a conflict of judicial decisions. To understand the precise scope of the section it is necessary to bear in mind the rule of Hindu law that where a son or grandson takes any ancestral property by survivorship, he is bound to pay out of such property all debts of his ancestor not incurred for immoral or illegal purposes including judgment debts. The question we are now concerned with is—by what procedure is this liability to be enforced? We proceed to consider the subject under the following four heads—

1 Where a money decree has been passed against the father, and the father dies before issue of execution—A and his sons B and C constitute a joint Hindu family owning an ancestral house. D obtains a decree against A for Rs. 5,000. A dies and on his death B and C take the ancestral property by survivorship. D applies for execution of the decree against B and C by attachment and sale of the whole of the family house (f). Is he entitled to do so or must he institute a fresh suit against B and C to recover the debt? According to the procedure prescribed by this Code, D should proceed to bring B and C on the record as the legal representatives of A under s. 50, and then apply under that section to the Court which passed the decree to execute it against B and C to the extent of the ancestral property come to their hands. The words in s. 50 are, "to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his [legal representative's] hands." According to the present section, the ancestral property in the hands of B and C being liable under Hindu law for the payment of A's debts, it is to be deemed for the purposes of s. 50, to be the property of the deceased which has come to the hands of B and C as the legal representatives of A. If B and C object that the debt in respect of which the decree was passed was tainted with immorality, the question is one relating to the execution of the decree within the meaning of s. 47 and it should be determined by the Court executing the decree (g). This coincides with the view taken by the High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta under the Code of 1882 (h). According to the Madras and Allahabad decisions under that Code, a decree against a Hindu father could not be executed against ancestral property in the hands of the sons not even to the extent of the father's interest in the property, and the only remedy of the decree holder was to institute a regular suit against the sons. This view proceeded on the ground that the question whether the debts were tainted with immorality was not one that could be gone into in execution proceedings (i). These decisions are no longer law.

2 Where a money decree has been passed against the father and the father dies after attachment but before sale of the ancestral property—All the High Courts are agreed that where the father dies after attachment of the ancestral property, the proceedings in execution can be continued against the sons (j). In fact, having regard to the provisions of the present section, a separate suit against the sons would be barred by s. 47.

3 Where a mortgage decree has been passed against the father and the father dies before sale of the mortgaged property—Where a decree is obtained against the father for sale of ancestral property mortgaged by him and he dies before sale, the proceedings in execution may be continued against the sons. But the sons, not being parties to the suit, are entitled to raise in execution proceedings such questions as they could have raised if they had been made parties (1). They can dispute the factum of the debt, or they can show that the debt was incurred for immoral purposes and is not therefore binding on the property (2). See notes to O 34, r 1, 'Mortgage of joint family property'.

4 Where a decree has been passed against the sons in respect of their father's debt for payment of the debt out of the ancestral property—In such a case, the decree holder may proceed to execute the decree by attachment and sale of the ancestral property come to the hands of the sons. The proceedings would be under s 52. The expression 'property of the deceased' in that section would be construed in the light of the present section. In fact, s 53 is an Explanation to s 50 and 52, explaining the meaning of the expression property of the deceased.

It will be seen from what has been stated above that a creditor can now follow the property in the hands of the sons or grandsons in execution not only in cases (2), (3) and (4), but also in case (1).

estate, the partition of the estate or the separation of the share shall be made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector deputed by him in this behalf, in accordance with the law (if any) for the time being in force relating to the partition, or the separate possession of shares, of such estates.

Partition by Collector—This section is a reproduction of s 265 of the Code of 1882 with a few verbal alterations. Where a decree has been passed for partition or for separate possession of a share of an estate of the description mentioned in this section, the proper authority to effect the partition or to deliver possession of the share is the Collector. The Court has no power to do so (m).

Application of the section—This section does not apply to a suit for partition of a revenue paying estate where no separate allotment of revenue is asked for. It has been so held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta in Jogodishuri v. Aailash Chandra (n), a case under s 265 of the Code of 1882. Commenting on that section Maclean, C J, said "The suit is one for the partition, not of the whole estate, but of a part only of the estate, and it does not seek to affect any division or payment of the revenue. I do not think that the section intended to make it compulsory that the Collector should make the partition, save in cases where as the result of partition the revenue would or might be affected."

Partition.—The term 'partition' in this section is not confined to a mere division of the lands in question into the requisite parts, but includes the delivery of the share to their respective allottees (o).

Jurisdiction of Court to control Collector's action—Where a decree relates to an estate of the kind mentioned in this section it should declare the rights of the several parties interested in the property, but as regards partition or separation it should direct the same to be made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector deputed by him in that behalf (p) [see O 20 r 18]. This section places the execution of the decree entirely in the hands of the Collector. But if the Collector contravenes the decretal command of the Court, or transgresses the law for the time being in force relating to partition, his action is subject to the control and correction of the Court which passed the decree and sent it to him for execution (q). In such a case, the aggrieved party should proceed by an application under s 47, and not by a separate suit (r). Where a Collector has made a partition, there is nothing to prevent him from reversing the partition for mistake or other cause before he has passed final orders and returned the proceedings to the Court (s).

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that an objection that the Collector has made an unequal partition is no ground for interference by the Court with the order passed by the Collector (t). But in a Madras case, where all the parties objected to a partition effected by the Collector on the ground that it was unequal it was held that the Court had the power to entertain the objection (u).

"Estate"—The word estate is here used in its ordinary signification (v). Shers lands, that is lands held under a lease from Government for a fixed period, come within the terms of this section as revenue paying lands (w). But isolated plots of land which fall short of being the share of a co-sharer of a mahal do not (x). A raiyatwari holding has been held not to be an estate within the meaning of this section (y).

ARREST AND DETENTION

55. [S 336] (1) A judgment debtor may be arrested in execution of a decree at any hour and on any day, and shall, as soon as practicable, be brought before the Court, and his detention may be in the civil prison of the district in which the Court ordering the detention is situate, or, where such civil prison does not afford suitable accommodation, in any other place which the Local Government may appoint for the detention of persons ordered by the Courts of such district to be detained.

Provided, firstly, that, for the purpose of making an arrest under this section, no dwelling house shall be entered after sunset and before sunrise.

(p) The provisions of s 49 of the Specific Relief Act 1877 do not constitute a bar to such a decree. Papan Rii v Sudh Kuran (1919) 41 All 20; 491 III 267. Itman v Nigh v Tulsi

Provided, secondly, that no outer door of a dwelling-house shall be broken open unless such dwelling-house is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor and he refuses or in any way prevents access thereto, but when the officer authorised to make the arrest has duly gained access to any dwelling-house, he may break open the door of any room in which he has reason to believe the judgment-debtor is to be found

Provided, thirdly, that, if the room is in the actual occupancy of a woman who is not the judgment debtor and who according to the customs of the country does not appear in public, the officers authorized to make the arrest shall give notice to her that she is at liberty to withdraw, and, after allowing a reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing, may enter the room for the purpose of making the arrest

Provided, fourthly, that, where the decree in execution of which a judgment-debtor is arrested, is a decree for the payment of money, and the judgment debtor pays the amount of the decree and the costs of the arrest to the officer arresting him, such officer shall at once release him.

(2) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any person or class of persons whose arrest might be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public shall not be hable to arrest in execution of a decree otherwise than in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed by the Local Government in this behalf.

(3) Where a judgment-debtor is arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money and brought before the Court, the Court shall inform him that he may apply to be declared an insolvent, and that he may (z) be discharged if he has not committed any act of bad faith regarding the subject of the application and if he complies with the provisions of the law of insolvency for the time being in force

(4) Where a judgment-debtor expresses his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent and furnishes security, to the satisfaction of the Court, that he will within one month so apply, and that he will appear, when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested, the Court may (a) release him from arrest, and,

(z) The word "may" was substituted for "will" by Act 3 of 1921

(a) The word "may" was substituted for "shall" by Act 3 of 1921

if he fails so to apply and to appear, the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit him to civil prison in execution of the decree. S.

See II 21, r. 40 [proceedings on appearance of judgment debtor in obedience to notice or after arrest]

Changes introduced in the section.—This section corresponds with s 336 of the Code of 1882, except in the following particulars —

1. Any outer door of a dwelling house may now be broken open to effect the arrest of a judgment debtor in execution of a decree. But the dwelling-house must be in the occupancy of the judgment debtor. See sub section (1), proviso (2)
- 2 The security under sub sec (4) must not only be for the filing by the judgment-debtor of a petition in insolvency, but also for his appearance, when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application in insolvency or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested. See notes below, "Discharge of surety"
- 3 A power has been conferred on the Local Government to exempt certain persons from arrest. See sub section (2)

Breaking open of outer door—Under the Code of 1882, the breaking open of any outer door of a dwelling-house was strictly prohibited. This prohibition has now been removed to this extent that where a dwelling house is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor, and he refuses or prevents access thereto, the officer authorized to make the arrest may break open any outer door of such dwelling house. But this does not authorize him to break open the outer door of a dwelling house merely because the judgment debtor is to be found in that house. The prohibition above referred to as well as the prohibition against entering a dwelling house after sunset for effecting an arrest are to be traced to the maxim of English law that "a man's house is his castle." Referring to this maxim, Bentham wrote more than a century ago: "This poetical expression is certainly no reason for if a man's house be his castle by night, why not by day." The course of justice is sometimes interrupted in England by this puerile notion of liberty." (b)

Sub-section (2)—This sub section is new. It is intended to cover the cases of certain persons or classes of persons whose summary arrest might, as in the case of railway servants, be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public.

Sub-section (4)—Discharge of surety.—Under the Code of 1882, the security required was "that the judgment debtor will appear when called upon, and that he will within one month, apply under section 336 to be declared an insolvent." It was held upon the construction of those words that where a security bond provided that the surety would produce the judgment debtor when the Court should direct him to do so, the surety was released from his obligation under the bond by the mere filing by the judgment debtor of a petition to be declared an insolvent. Neither the withdrawal of the petition, nor failure to proceed with the petition, nor even failure on the would appear before the Court when called upon, and would within one month file a petition to be declared an insolvent (d). These decisions are no longer law. Sub section (4) now makes it clear that where a security bond is passed in the terms of that sub-section, that is, where a surety undertakes (1) that the judgment debtor will undertake within one month to apply to be declared an insolvent and (2) will appear, when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested, the surety will not be released by the mere filing by the judgment debtor of the petition in insolvency. The security continues until a final order is made on the petition (e).

A surety under this section is discharged by the death of the judgment debtor before breach of either of the two conditions mentioned above (f). But the death of the judgment debtor after the first condition has failed, namely, the undertaking to apply to be declared an insolvent within one month, cannot affect the surety's liability with regard to that condition (g). A surety is also discharged if the execution proceedings are struck off (h), but not if liability had already accrued under the bond by a breach of either of the two conditions before the proceedings were struck off (i).

It is provided by sub sec (4) that if the judgment debtor fails to apply or to appear, the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit the judgment debtor to prison. This does not mean that the Court may proceed both against the surety and the judgment debtor for if the surety is proceeded against and the amount is recovered from him under the conditions of the bond then the judgment debtor cannot be committed to jail in execution, and if the judgment-debtor is committed to jail the state of affairs is just the same as if the surety had never come forward. But the mere issue of a warrant against the judgment debtor, the warrant remaining unexecuted, is not sufficient by itself to discharge the surety (j).

Realization of security—See s 145

56. [S 245A] Notwithstanding anything in this Part, the Court shall not order the arrest or detention in the civil prison of a woman in execution of a decree for the payment of money

Prohibition of arrest or

Security for costs—This section provides that a woman shall not be arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money. At the same time, if the plaintiff is a woman and her suit is for the payment of money, she may be required to give security for the defendant's costs. See O 25 r 1 (3).

58. [Ss 341, 342] (1) Every person detained in the civil prison in execution of a decree shall be so detained,—

Detention and release

(a) where the decree is for the payment of a sum of money exceeding fifty rupees, for a period of six months, and,

(b) in any other case, for a period of six weeks

Provided that he shall be released from such detention before the expiration of the said period of six months or six weeks, as the case may be,—

- (i) on the amount mentioned in the warrant for his detention being paid to the officer in charge of the civil prison, or
- (ii) on the decree against him being otherwise fully satisfied, or
- (iii) on the request of the person on whose application he has been so detained, or
- (iv) on the omission by the person, on whose application he has been so detained, to pay subsistence allowance

Provided, also, that he shall not be released from such detention under clause (ii) or clause (iii) without the order of the Court

(2) A judgment debtor released from detention under this section shall not merely by reason of his release be discharged from his debt, but he shall not be liable to be rearrested under the decree in execution of which he was detained in the civil prison

Period of detention in jail—The first part of sub section (1) up to the words six weeks corresponds with s 342 of the Code of 1882. The phraseology of that section however has now been altered to make it quite clear that the period of detention shall be (1) six months where the amount of the decree exceeds Rs 50 and (2) six weeks in any other case and that the Court has no power to fix shorter periods than those prescribed in the section (1)

Re-arrest—The immunity of a judgment debtor from a second arrest depends not only upon his having been arrested but upon his having been detained in jail under the arrest. Thus where a judgment debtor, while acting as a pleader in Court, was arrested and discharged on the ground that he was exempt from arrest under s 642 of the Code of 1882 (now s 135) it was held that he was liable to be re-arrested in execution of the same decree against him (1). Similarly where a judgment debtor was arrested, but was liberated owing to non payment of subsistence money, it was held that he was liable to be re arrested in execution of the same decree (m) To use the language of sub section (2), the judgment debtor was not in either case released from detention so as to prevent his re arrest.

Interim protection order.—A is arrested and committed to jail in execution of a decree against him While in jail he files his petition in insolvency, and obtains an interim protection order for one week, and is thereupon released from jail He then applies for a further protection order, but his application is refused. Is A liable to be re arrested in execution of the same decree? The Calcutta High Court has held that he is not liable to be re arrested, on the ground that a judgment debtor once discharged from jail cannot be arrested a second time in execution of the same decree (n) On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Bombay that A is liable to be re arrested, the reason given being that the only cases in which a judgment debtor is exempt from re arrest are those specified in this section, and that release under an interim protection order is not one of them (o). The Calcutta decision, it is submitted is not correct.

Contempt of Court.—This section does not apply to cases of imprisonment for contempt of Court (p)

59. [S. 653] (1) At any time after a warrant for the Release on ground of illness arrest of a judgment-debtor has been issued the Court may cancel it on the ground of his serious illness.

(2) Where a judgment-debtor has been arrested, the Court may release him if, in its opinion, he is not in a fit state of health to be detained in the civil prison.

(3) Where a judgment-debtor has been committed to the civil prison, he may be released therefrom—

(a) by the Local Government, on the ground of the existence of any infectious or contagious disease, or

(b) by the committing Court, or any Court to which that Court is subordinate, on the ground of his suffering from any serious illness.

(4) A judgment-debtor released under this section may be re-arrested but the period of his detention in the civil prison shall not in the aggregate exceed that prescribed by section 58.

60. [S 256] (1) The following property is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, namely, lands, houses or other buildings, goods, money, banknotes, cheques, bills of exchange, hundis, promissory notes,

Property liable to attachment and sale in execution of decree

Government securities, bonds or other securities for money, debts, shares in a corporation and, save as hereinafter mentioned, all other saleable property, moveable or immoveable, belonging to the judgment debtor, or over which, or the profits of which, he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, whether the same be held in the name of the judgment debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf

Provided that the following particulars shall not be liable to such attachment or sale, namely —

- (a) the necessary wearing apparel, cooking vessels, beds and bedding of the judgment debtor, his wife and children, and such personal ornaments as, in accordance with religious usage cannot be parted with by any woman,
- (b) tools of artizans, and, where the judgment debtor is an agriculturist, his implements of husbandry and such cattle and seed grain as may, in the opinion of the Court, be necessary to enable him to earn his livelihood as such, and such portion of agricultural produce or of any class of agricultural produce as may have been declared to be free from liability under the provisions of the next following section,
- (c) houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the land immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him,
- (d) books of account,
- (e) a mere right to sue for damages,
- (f) any right of personal service;

- (g) stipends and gratuities allowed to pensioners of the Government, or payable out of any service family pension fund notified in the Gazette of India by the Governor General in Council in this behalf, and political pensions,
- (h) allowances (being less than salary) of any public officer or of any servant of a railway company or local authority while absent from duty,
- (i) the salary or allowances equal to salary of any such public officer or servant as is referred to in clause (h), while on duty, to the extent of—
 - (i) the whole of the salary, where the salary does not exceed forty rupees monthly,
 - (ii) forty rupees monthly, where the salary exceeds forty rupees and does not exceed eighty rupees monthly, and
 - (iii) one moiety of the salary in any other case,

Provided that where the decree holder is a society registered or deemed to be registered under the Co operative Societies Act, 1912, and the judgment debtor is a member of the society, the provisions of sub clauses (i) and (ii) shall be construed as if the word 'twenty' were substituted for the word 'forty' wherever it occurs and the word 'forty' for the word 'eighty'

- (j) the pay and allowances of persons to whom the Indian Articles of War apply
- (k) all compulsory deposits and other sums in or derived from any fund to which the Provident Funds Act 1897, for the time being applies in so far as they are declared by the said Act not to be liable to attachment,
- (l) the wages of labourers and domestic servants whether payable in money or in kind,
- (m) an expectancy of succession by survivorship or other merely contingent or possible right or interest,
- (n) a right to future maintenance,
- (o) any allowance declared by any law passed under the Indian Councils Acts, 1861, and 1892, to be exempt from liability to attachment or sale in execution of a decree, and

- (p) where the judgment-debtor is a person liable for the payment of land-revenue, any moveable property which, under any law for the time being applicable to him, is exempt from sale for the recovery of an arrear of such revenue

Explanation—The particulars mentioned in clauses (g), (h), (i), (j), (l) and (o) are exempt from attachment or sale whether before or after they are actually payable

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to exempt houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the lands immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) from attachment or sale in execution of decrees for rent of any such house, building, site or land

Changes introduced by the section—This section corresponds with s 260 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars—

- 1 In cl (a) the words cooking vessels beds and and such personal ornaments as in accordance with religious usage cannot be parted with by any woman, have been added See notes below
- 2 The latter portion of cl (b) relating to agricultural produce is new
- 3 Cl (c) stood as follows in s 266 of the Code of 1882—The materials of houses and other buildings belonging to agriculturists
- 4 In cl (g) the words or payable out of any service family pension fund notified in the Gazette of India by the Governor General in Council in this behalf have been added
- 5 Cl (h) is new See notes below
- 6 In cl (i) the words or allowances equal to salary and while on duty have been added See notes below
- 7 Cl (k) is new See notes below
- 8 In cl (l) the words whether payable in moneys or in kind are new
- 9 The alterations in sub section (2) cl (a) correspond with the alterations in sub section (1) cl (c)

Amendment of the section—Sub sec (2) as it originally stood contained a clause being clause (b) which ran thus (b) to affect the provisions of the Army Act or of any similar law for the time being in force That clause was repealed by Act 10 of 1914 Sch II See notes below Salary of Army officers

In clause (i), the word forty was substituted for 'twenty, and the word eighty for forty by Act 26 of 1923

The proviso to clause (i) was added by the Amending Act 20 of 1930

"In execution of a decree."—The expression 'decree' in this section refers to a money decree and not a mortgage decree for attachment is not necessary in mortgage decrees The result is that the exemptions from attachment and sale contained in the proviso to this section do not apply to a mortgage decree for sale (q)

"Saleable property."—Subject to the proviso to sub-section (1) all saleable property which belongs to the judgment-debtor may be attached and sold in execution of a decree against him The equity of redemption of a mortgagor in mortgaged pro

erty is 'saleable property' within the meaning of this section, and is therefore liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree against him (r) The share of a partner in a partnership business is 'saleable property,' and can be attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained against him by his creditor (s) The right to claim specific performance of a contract to sell land is also attachable and saleable (t) A life interest in trust funds is attachable and saleable in execution of a decree against the life tenant (u) Similarly a vested remainder can be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the remainderman (v)

The word 'saleable' in this section means saleable by auction at a compulsory sale under the orders of the Court It has no reference to property made non transferable by an agreement between the parties to a transaction It has accordingly been held that a condition in a permanent lease that the landlord would re enter if the tenant made any transfer of the land demised, does not make the land unsaleable in execution The lease forbids a sale by the tenant, but does not prevent a sale by the Court (w) Country liquor is 'saleable' property within the meaning of this section, though the permission of the Collector may be necessary to the sale thereof under the Abkari Act (x)

Security for performance of duty—Money or other valuable security deposited as security for the due performance of duty by a servant with his master may be attached in execution of a decree against the servant, but the attachment will be subject to the lien which the master has upon the deposit, and the deposit cannot be sold until the same is at the disposal of the servant free from the lien of the master at the expiration of the period of employment (y)

Land assigned for maintenance—Where land was assigned to a Hindu widow for her maintenance with a proviso against alienation, it was held that she had no saleable interest in the usufruct (z)

Non transferable offices—A religious office is not saleable property (a) Similarly the right of managing a temple, of officiating at the worship conducted in it, and of receiving the offerings at the shrine, is not saleable (b) The right to officiate at funeral ceremonies is also not saleable (c) The property of a temple cannot be sold away from the temple But there is no objection to the sale of the right, title and interest of the servant of a temple in land belonging to the temple which he holds as remuneration for his service the interest sold being subject in the hands of the alienee to determination by the death of the original holder, or by his removal from office for failure to perform the service (d)

Service of a public nature—Land burdened with the performance of a service of a public nature, e.g., land held on Swastivachakam service tenure, is inalienable, and cannot be attached (e)

Restraint upon anticipation—The income of property subject to a restraint upon anticipation accruing due after the date of the judgment cannot be attached in execution of a decree against the separate property of a married woman passed under s 8 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1874 (f)

Right of residence—The right of a widow under the Hindu law to reside in her husband's family house is a purely personal right and cannot be transferred. Such right cannot be attached in execution as it is not 'saleable' property (g). For other kinds of property which cannot be alienated see Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s 6

"Property."—A sues B for partnership accounts. The question of accounts is then referred to arbitration with the consent of the parties. While the award is not yet made, X, a creditor of A, applies for attachment of the rights and interest of A in the award. The attachment cannot be allowed for the expectant claim under an inchoate award is not "property" within the meaning of this section (h). Money paid into Court as a fine in a criminal case against a judgment debtor is, after the order imposing the fine is set aside, attachable under this section as money belonging to the judgment debtor even before the issue of a refund certificate (i).

The doors and windows of a building cannot be separately attached, for they have no separate existence as property (j). An unascertained right in unascertained property could not be the subject of attachment (k).

"Disposing power."—A property may not belong to a judgment debtor, and yet he may have a disposing power over it exercisable for his own benefit. In such cases the property is liable to attachment and sale subject to the proviso to this section.

Trustee of a charity—A trustee of a religious endowment has no disposing power over the corpus of the trust estate exercisable for his own benefit, hence the corpus cannot be attached (l).

Life interest—Where under a compromise with a reversioner a Hindu widow was allowed to keep certain property for her life, and she agreed not to alienate it, and on her death the property was to pass to the reversioner, it was held that she had no disposing power over the property (m).

Bonus sanctioned by railway company—A bonus sanctioned by a Railway Company to its servant is virtually a gift which must be completed either by a registered document or by actual payment as required by s 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. A Railway Company sanctioned a bonus to A, and the amount was forwarded to the District Paymaster of the Company for payment to A. Before the amount was paid to A, it was attached in the hands of the Paymaster by a creditor of A. It was held that the amount could not be attached, for the gift was not complete, and A had therefore no disposing power over the money (n).

Delivery to post office—A sends a cover containing currency notes to the Post Office for delivery to B, the addressee. Can the cover be attached while it is yet in the Post Office by a creditor of B? It has been held that it can be attached, the reason given being that the cover is in the disposing power of B. "When once the letter has been posted, the property in it becomes vested in the addressee" (o).

Auctioneer—An auctioneer has no disposing power over the whole of the sale proceeds of goods sold by him, but only over that portion of it which represents his commission. Hence the whole of the sale proceeds in the hands of an auctioneer cannot be attached, in execution of a decree against him but only so much of it which represents his commission (p).

Clause (c): right to sue for damages.—"Mesne profits" are in the nature of damages, and the right to sue for mesne profits is a right to sue for "damages." Such a right cannot therefore be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the person entitled to the right. Thus if A is entitled to claim mesne profits from B for wrongful dispossession of his lands, A's right to claim for mesne profits from B cannot be attached and sold in execution of a decree against A. If the right is attached and sold and purchased by X, X is not entitled to sue B for the mesne profits, the sale to him being void (g).

Clause (f): right of personal service.—A virshi is a right to receive certain emoluments as a reward for personal service, and is therefore exempt from attachment and sale (h). The but Maha brahman or right to officiate as a priest at the funeral ceremonies of Hindus dying within a particular district is a right of personal service and cannot therefore be attached (i). Jatri bahis which merely contain the names and addresses of pilgrims who are clients of the judgment debtor and which are of use to him to perform personal service to the pilgrims are not attachable (j).

Clause (g): gratuities allowed by Government.—The gratuity referred to in this section is a bonus allowed by Government to its servants in consideration of past services. It may be allowed to one who is not a pensioner, or it may be allowed to a pensioner in addition to his pension. In either case it is exempt from attachment (k).

Stipends payable out of service family pension fund notified in the Gazette of India.—For notifications issued under this clause [i.e., cl (g)], see General Statutory Rules and Orders, vol IV, p 683.

Political pensions.—All pensions of a political nature payable directly by the Government of India are political pensions. A pension which the Government of India has given a guarantee that it will pay by a treaty obligation contracted with another sovereign power is a political pension (l). Arrears of political pension due to a pensioner and lying in the hands of Government at the time of his death do not lose their character of political pension by reason merely of the pensioner's death. The character of the funds remains unchanged so long as it remains unpaid in the hands of Government and it is not liable to attachment in the hands of Government in execution of a decree against the deceased. But once the fund has passed out of the hands of Government into the hands of the legal representative of the deceased it may be attached like any other portion of the deceased's estate (m).

A grant of a Zamindari by Government to A. B. as a reward for past services rendered by him to Government is not a pension, but a gift, and may therefore be attached in execution of a decree against the grantee. The word pension in this section implies periodical payments of money by Government (n).

Allowances granted to the Candian pensioners of Ceylon (o), to the members of the family of the King of Oudh (p), to the members of the Mysore family (q), and to the descendants of the Nawab of Carnatic (r) are instances of political pensions.

Private pensions—Private pensions, as distinguished from Government pensions, are not exempt from attachment and they may be attached either as 'debts' or as "property belonging to the judgment debtor" within the meaning of this section. But they neither constitute 'debts' nor 'property belonging to the judgment debtor' until they have become due and payable. Hence they cannot be attached before they have become due and payable. Pensions granted by Railway Companies to their servants are private pensions (a).

Clause (h): allowances, being less than salary, of a public officer while absent from duty.—This clause is new. The allowances (being less than salary) of a public officer [s 2 (17)] while absent from duty are now wholly exempt from attachment. Under the Code of 1882 it was held, in the absence of any specific provision as to these allowances, that they stood on the same footing as the salary of a public officer while on duty and were exempt from attachment only to the extent to which such salary was exempt, and no more [see cl (i)]. Thus where an officer was on sick leave on half pay which was Rs 150, it was held that the decree holder could attach Rs 75 (i). Under this clause the whole of Rs 150 is exempt from attachment.

Clause (i): salary of public officer while on duty—The salary of a public officer [s 2 (17)] can be attached only partially, except where it does not exceed Rs 40 monthly in which case the whole of it is exempt from attachment. The object of the exemption appears to be to enable a public officer to maintain himself and his family in a position suitable to his rank. This exemption did not occur in the Code of 1859, hence the salary of a public officer and of the other persons mentioned in this clause was attachable to the extent of the whole as a "debt". And since it could only be attached as a "debt," it was not attachable until it had become due (u). Under the Codes of 1877 and 1882, and under the present Code, the salary, to the extent to which it is attachable may be attached in advance (i). It is no valid reason for refusing the attachment that the attachment, if allowed, would not leave the officer enough to live on (w). As to the salary of Army officers see notes below under the head Salary of Army officers. See notes Amendment of the section, on p 169 above.

Salary of private servant—The salary of a private servant can be attached as a 'debt,' hence it cannot be attached before it has become due (x).

Clause (j): Indian Articles of War—The Indian Articles of War apply only to soldiers and followers of the Native Army see Act V of 1860, amended by Act XII of 1894. Hence the pay and allowances of soldiers and followers of the Native Army are exempt from attachment.

Clause (k): compulsory deposits—The expression 'compulsory deposit' is defined in s 2 (a) of the Provident Funds Act III of 1925 as being a subscription to, or deposit in a Provident Fund which, under the rules of the Fund, is not, until the happening of some specified contingency, repayable on demand otherwise than for the purpose of the payment of premium in respect of a policy of life insurance, and includes etc. By s 3 of the Act it is provided that a compulsory deposit in any Government or Railway Provident Fund shall not be liable to attachment under any decree or order of any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court in respect of any debt or liability incurred by the subscriber or depositor. A compulsory deposit cannot be attached so long as it

60. retains the character of compulsory deposit. A deposit which, when it was made, was a "compulsory deposit," continues to retain that character so long as it remains in the hands of the Railway Company. It does not lose that character, though the employee may have ceased to be in the service of the Company by retirement, resignation or dismissal, and may have become entitled in that event to be paid the amount due to his credit in the Provident Fund. But once it is paid out by the Company on the happening of any of the above events, it loses the character of "compulsory deposit," and it may be attached in the hands of the party to whom it has been paid (y). The same principle applies to the case of an optional subscriber who cannot under the rules demand payment of his deposits at his option (z).

Clause (1): wages of labourers—A “labourer” = a person who earns his daily bread by personal manual labour, or in occupations which require little or no art, skill or previous education. Thus persons who agree to spin cotton and to receive a certain amount of money for a certain quantity of cotton spun by them are labourers, and their wages cannot be attached (a)

Clause (m): expectancy of succession, etc.—The interest which a Hindu reversioner has in the immovable property of a deceased Hindu on the death of the deceased's widow, is "an expectancy of succession by survivorship," in other words it is an interest expectant on the widow's death to which the reversioner could only succeed if he survived the widow (b). The interest in the pre-empted property of a successful pre-emptor who has not yet paid the pre-emptive price fixed by his decree is a 'merely contingent interest' which cannot be attached (c), see O 20, r 14.

Clause (n): right to future maintenance.—If A is entitled to a monthly maintenance allowance under an agreement, the allowance cannot be attached until after it has become due (d). It cannot be attached prospectively, that is, before it has become due (e). In other words, arrears of maintenance may be attached, but not the right to future maintenance. A hereditary grant of an allowance of paddy out of the melwaram of certain land is not a right to future maintenance so as to be exempt from attachment under this section (f). Where a person holds villages under a deed which provides that he is to hold them and receive the profits in lieu of maintenance without power of transfer, the interest of such person in the villages is a right to future maintenance (g). But an annuity is not a "right to future maintenance", and it may be attached and sold (h). See notes to s. 51. "Receiver in execution proceedings."

It is provided by s 136 of the Army Act, 1881 [stat 44 and 45 Vict], amended by the Army (Annual) Act of 1893, that the pay of an officer or soldier of His Majesty's Regular Forces serving in India shall be paid to him without deduction unless the Legislature in India has directed to the contrary in that behalf. Under section 60 of the Code as it stood before the amendment above referred to, questions arose as to the extent of application of the Army Act. As regards officers in the British Army, it was held that they were officers of His Majesty's Regular Forces within the meaning of s 136 of the Army Act, and that their salary therefore could not be attached at all (i). As regards officers in the Indian Army, there was a conflict of decisions. The High Courts of Calcutta and Madras (j) held that an officer in the Indian Army was not an officer of His Majesty's Regular Forces within the meaning of s 136 of the Army Act, and that his salary therefore was liable to be attached to the extent mentioned in s 60 (1) (i). On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Bombay (k), relying on s 190, sub s (8), of the said Act, that an officer in the Indian Army was an officer of His Majesty's Regular Forces and that his salary therefore could not be attached at all.

Cl (b) of sub s (2) having been repealed, the question arises whether the salary of an officer of His Majesty's Regular Forces can be attached under this section as salary of a public officer to the extent mentioned in cl (i) of sub sec (1). It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (l) and Bombay (m), that it can be so attached. These cases, must be distinguished from a Bombay case in which the question was whether the salary of a First Class Warrant Officer can be attached under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in execution of a decree for maintenance obtained against him by his wife. It was held that it would not be attached under the Code. The ground of the decision was that a First Class Warrant Officer was a soldier, as defined by s 190 of the Army Act that under s 145 of the Act no execution can issue against his pay in respect of the maintenance of his wife but a specified sum may be deducted for such maintenance from his pay, and that an order had already been made for such deduction by the Commander in Chief (n).

Objection to attachment that property not saleable when to be raised—A obtains a decree against B, and applies for execution of the decree by attachment and sale of certain property belonging to B. The property is attached and sold, and purchased by C. B then applies to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the property was not liable to attachment and sale. Can the application be entertained? It has been held that if B was a party to the order for sale, or was aware of it and did not appeal against it, he is precluded from questioning the propriety of the order after the sale, and he cannot therefore impeach the sale. "A judgment debtor who might have raised objections prior to the sale, but who has refrained from doing so, and who might have appealed against the order for sale, has no right after the sale has been carried out to prefer an objection that the property sold was not legally saleable" (o). But if B was not aware of the proceedings in attachment of the property, or of the proceedings in connection with the sale thereof, the application to set aside the sale may be entertained even after the sale is confirmed (p). The interest in the pre-empted property of a successful pre-emptor who has not yet paid the pre-emptive price fixed by his decree is a "merely contingent interest" which cannot be attached (c), see O 20, r 14.

It is provided by s 136 of the Army Act, 1881 [stat 44 and 45 Vict], amended by the Army (Annual) Act of 1895, that the pay of an officer or soldier of His Majesty's Regular Forces serving in India shall be paid to him without deduction unless the Legislature in India has directed to the contrary in that behalf. Under section 60 of the Code as it stood before the amendment above referred to, questions arose as to the extent of application of the Army Act. As regards officers in the British Army, it was held that they were officers of His Majesty's Regular Forces within the meaning of s 136 of the Army Act, and that their salary therefore could not be attached at all (i). Cl (b) of sub s (2) having been repealed, the question arises whether the salary of an officer of His Majesty's Regular Forces can be attached under this section as salary of a public officer to the extent mentioned in cl. (i) of sub sec (1). It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (l) and Bombay (m), that it can be so attached. Seizure of property in dwelling house

(2) No outer door of a dwelling-house shall be broken open unless such dwelling-house is in the occupancy of the judgment debtor and he refuses or in any way prevents access thereto, but when the person executing any such process has duly gained access to any dwelling house, he may break open the door of any room in which he has reason to believe any such property to be

(3) Where a room in a dwelling-house is in the actual occupancy of a woman who, according to the customs of the country, does not appear in public, the person executing the process shall give notice to such woman that she is at liberty to withdraw, and, after allowing reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing, he may enter such room for the purpose of seizing the property, using at the same time every precaution, consistent with these provisions, to prevent its clandestine removal.

Changes introduced by the section—This section corresponds with s 271 of the Code of 1882, except that the prohibition against breaking open any outer door of a dwelling house has been relaxed where the dwelling house is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor. See notes to s 55 under the head 'Breaking open of outer door' on p 163 above

'Dwelling-house'—A shop or a godown is not a 'dwelling house' within the meaning of this section (r)

63. [S 285] (1) Where property not in the custody of any Court is under attachment in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, the Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof shall be the Court of highest grade, or, where there is no difference in grade between such Courts, the Court under whose decree the property was first attached

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to invalidate any proceeding taken by a Court executing one of such decrees

Changes introduced in the section—This section corresponds with s 285 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars—

(1) The words 'is under attachment' have been substituted for the words 'has been attached' See notes below, under the head 'Is under attachment'

(2) Sub section (2) is new. See notes below

Object of the section—The object of this section is to prevent different claims arising out of the attachment and sale of the same property by different Courts in other words, it is to prevent confusion in the execution of decrees (s)

Application of the section—A attaches certain property in execution of a decree obtained by him against B in the Small Causes Court at Surat. The same property is subsequently attached by C in execution of a decree obtained against B in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Surat. The Court of the Subordinate Judge is a Court of higher grade than the Small Causes Court, and it is therefore the proper Court under this section for deciding objections to the attachment, for determining claims made to the property, and for ordering the sale thereof and receiving the sale proceeds (t)

Sub-section (2)—This sub section is new. It declares in effect that a proceeding in execution shall not be deemed to be invalid, merely because it was taken by a Court which ought not to have taken it having regard to the provisions of sub section (1). Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions on the question whether the rule contained in s 285 of that Code [now sub sec (1)] was a rule of procedure only or whether it affected jurisdiction. It was held by the High Courts of Calcutta (u), Bombay (v), and Madras (w), that the rule was merely a rule of procedure, and that it did not oust the Suppose now that the same property is attached by a Munsif and by a Subordinate Judge, s 64 that it is then sold by the Munsif to A, and after the sale the decree holder in the Subordinate Judge's Court applies for sale of the property to that Court. In such a case, as stated above, the sale by the Munsif is valid, but the question is whether A is entitled to apply to the Subordinate Judge under s 47 to stop the sale on the ground that the title to the property has passed to him. According to the Madras High Court, he is, the reason given being that he is the "representative of the judgment debtor within the meaning of s 47 (f)". According to the Calcutta High Court, he is not, the reason given being that he is not the "representative of the judgment-debtor (g)".

'Is under attachment'—These words have been substituted for the words 'has been attached' to make it clear that the provisions of this section do not apply unless there are two or more attachments existing at the same time (h).

'Decrees of more Courts than one'—This section applies only as between Civil Courts of different grades or as between Revenue Courts of different grades. It does not apply where one decree is that of a Civil Court and another that of a Revenue Court. Hence where the same property is attached by a Civil Court and a Revenue Court, and it is sold by the Revenue Court, the purchaser is entitled to the property, and it cannot be sold in execution of the decree of the Civil Court (i).

Rateable distribution—See notes to s 73. Court to which application for execution should be made.

64. [S. 276] Where an attachment has been made any private alienation of property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment debtor of any debt, dividend or other monies contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.

Private alienation of property after attachment to be void

Explanation—For the purposes of this section, claims enforceable under an attachment include claims for the rateable distribution of assets.

Section 276 of the Code of 1882 was as follows:—

When an attachment has been made by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid any private alienation of the property attached, whether by sale gift mortgage or otherwise and any payment of the debt or dividend or a delivery of the share to the judgment debtor during the continuance of the attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.

Changes introduced by the present section—The present section differs from the corresponding s 276 C P C, 1882 in the following respects—

- (1) The words 'by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid' after the words 'where an attachment has been made' in s 276 have been omitted as being mere surplusage (j). See notes below, Where an attachment has been made

- (2) The words "during the continuance of the attachment," which occurred in s 276, have been omitted, and the words "contrary to such attachment" have been substituted for them. See notes below, "Contrary to such attachment".
- (3) The Explanation to the section is new. See notes below, "Explanation to the section, etc."

Object of the section—A sues B for Rs 5 000. B owns a house worth Rs 5 000 and he has no other property. B may sell or mortgage the house notwithstanding the institution of the suit against him, and he may sell or mortgage it even after a decree has been passed against him in the suit, and the sale or mortgage in either case will be perfectly valid and pass a good title to the transferee (1). But if the property is attached in execution of the decree any private transfer of the property by B contrary to such attachment shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. The object of the section is to prevent fraud on decree holders (1), and to secure intact the rights of the attaching creditor against the attached property by prohibiting private alienations pending attachment (m).

"Where an attachment has been made —An attachment to render a subsequent alienation invalid must be made in the manner prescribed by the Code. Thus a promissory note must be attached by actual seizure as provided by O 21, r 51, and not by the issue of a prohibitory order. The mere issue of a prohibitory order does not amount to an attachment within the meaning of this section (n). Similarly in the case of immovable property, the attachment to render a subsequent alienation invalid must be made in the manner prescribed by O 21 r 54 (n2). An attachment made under that rule operates as a valid prohibition against alienation from the date on which the necessary proclamation is made and a copy of the order of attachment is affixed as provided by that rule, and not from the date of the order of attachment (o).

Attachment before judgment—An alienation of property after it is attached pursuant to an order for attachment before judgment is void under this section even though the property was not actually attached until after the passing of the decree. There is nothing in O 38 which requires that the actual attachment in pursuance of the order directing attachment should be made before the passing of the decree (p). See notes to O 38, r 5.

"Private transfer"—The expression "private transfer" means a voluntary sale, gift, or mortgage in contravention of the attachment order, and not the enforced execution of a conveyance or assignment in obedience to a decree of a Court competent to pass it (q). The decree may be one on an award (r).

Releasing an easement by the dominant owner to the servient owner is a transfer within the meaning of this section (4)

A private transfer under this section is not absolutely void, that is, void as against all the world (i), but void only as against claims enforceable under the attachment:—

(1) In execution of a decree obtained by A against B, certain property belonging to B is attached. During the pendency of the attachment, B mortgages the property to C. The property is then sold in execution of the decree and purchased by D. Here the mortgage having been made contrary to the attachment is void as against A's claim, and D is entitled to take the property free from the mortgage created by B. This illustration shows the operation of the section. See notes, 'Private sale of property attached to decree holder,' on p. 186 below.

(2) B's property is attached in execution of a decree obtained by A against him. While the attachment is pending, B sells the property to C, and pays out of the sale proceeds the amount of the decree into Court, and the attachment thereupon ceases [see O 21, r 53]. The sale to C is valid, the decree having been satisfied by payment into Court, and there being no claim outstanding which is enforceable under the attachment (u). Moreover, an alienation by means of which the decree in execution of which the attachment was made is satisfied can scarcely be regarded as an alienation contrary to the attachment (z).

(3) On the same principle, where A attaches B's property in execution of a decree obtained by him against B, and applications are thereafter made by other decree holders, C, D and E for rateable distribution without attaching the property in execution of their decrees, and subsequently B sells the property to F and pays off A (the attaching creditor), the other decree holders, namely, C, D and E are not entitled to question the alienation to F. In the first place, the alienation can hardly be said to be an alienation contrary to the attachment within the meaning of this section, for the alienation was the means by which the decree in execution of which the attachment was made was satisfied. In the next place, it cannot be said that the claims of C, D and E are "claims for the rateable distribution of assets" within the meaning of the Explanation to the section for to bring s. 73 [which provides for rateable distribution] into play certain conditions are necessary, and one of them is that there should be assets held by the Court. In the case now under consideration no assets came into the hands of the Court at all. Therefore C, D and E are not entitled to question the alienation by B to F, and the alienation is perfectly valid (u).

(4) A decree holder, though entitled to rateable distribution as contemplated by the Explanation to the section, is not entitled to question a private alienation under this section unless his claim be one "enforceable under the attachment" within the meaning of this section. The "attachment" referred to in this section is the attachment under which the execution sale is made. Therefore, a "claim enforceable under the attachment" means a claim enforceable under the attachment under which the execution sale is made (u). A claim under any other attachment is not a claim enforceable under the attachment within the meaning of this section. The result is that—if A obtains a decree against B, and B's property is attached in execution of the decree, and

B subsequently alienates the property to C, and the property is thereafter attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained by D against B, and it is purchased by F, and C sues F for possession,

C's title is to be preferred to F's title, and C is entitled to possession of the property. D cannot object to the alienation to C, for the alienation to C was prior to his attachment. Nor is A entitled to question the alienation, for the sale in execution was not made under his attachment, but under D's attachment. The sale having been made under D's attachment, A's claim cannot be said to be a "claim enforceable under the attachment" within the meaning of this section. The result would be the same even if we substitute A for D, that is, even if the decree holder in both cases was the same person. It was so held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mina Kumari v. Bijoy Singh (x). That was a case under s. 276 of the Code of 1882 which did not contain the Explanation which now occurs at the end of the present section. But the decision proceeded on the assumption that Sorabji v. Govind (y) cited in the notes below was good law, an assumption which involved that what now stands as the Explanation to the present section formed part also of the old section. Mina Kumari's case therefore would also govern cases under the present section.

If in the case put above the property was sold by the Court under A's attachment instead of D's, and D had applied for execution before the Court received the proceeds of the sale, the alienation to C would be void, it being contrary to A's attachment, and, further D would be entitled to rateable distribution under s. 73.

The attaching decree holder may agree with a purchaser of the property from the judgment debtor pending the attachment that he will not bring the property to sale in execution of his decree. Such an agreement has the effect of rendering the alienation valid as against the attaching creditor (z).

"Contrary to such attachment"—These words have been substituted for the words, "during the continuance of the attachment," which occurred in s. 276 of the Code of 1882. The words, "during the continuance of the attachment," were too wide in that they comprised alienations that could not possibly prejudice the rights of an attaching creditor, as where property is mortgaged by A to B, and the equity of redemption is subsequently attached at the instance of C in execution of a decree obtained by C against A, and pending the attachment the mortgage is transferred by B and A to D. In such a case the transfer of mortgage, though made during the continuance of the attachment, cannot prejudice C, the attaching creditor, for the effect of the transfer is merely to substitute D for B. But the transfer having been made "during the continuance of the attachment," it came literally within the old section 276, though it was not contrary to the attachment, and it was accordingly contended in a case before the Judicial Committee under s. 276 that the transfer was void as against C. But this contention, however, was overruled. Their Lordships held that the object of s. 276 was merely to prohibit alienations contrary to the attachment, and that an alienation such as the above by B and A to D cannot in any sense be said to be contrary to the attachment (a). The words, "contrary to the attachment," have now been substituted for the words "during the continuance of the attachment", they give effect to the Privy Council ruling noted above. Similarly, a renewal, though pending the attachment, of a mortgage already existing on the property, is not a transfer contrary to the attachment. But if the amount secured by the renewed mortgage exceeds the amount due under the original mortgage at the date of the attachment, the additional security is to that extent void (b)

Explanation to the section: Claims for rateable distribution of assets under s 73 are claims enforceable under an attachment within the meaning of this section—The Explanation to the section is new. A obtains a decree against B, and in execution of the decree attaches Rs 7,000 belonging to B in the hands of a Railway Company. B then assigns the said sum in the hands of the Railway Company to his attorneys for costs due to them subject to A's attachment. After the assignment C, another creditor of B, obtains a decree against B, and in execution of his decree attaches the said sum in the hands of the Railway Company. Thereafter the Company pays the said sum to the Sheriff of Bombay. The assignment by B to his attorneys, though made prior to C's attachment, is void as against C's claim. For C's claim is a claim for rateable distribution of assets [Rs 7,000] within the meaning of s 73, and therefore a claim enforceable under the attachment of A by virtue of the Explanation to this section. C is therefore entitled to be paid in priority to B's attorneys. This is the law under the present Code, and it is in accordance with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Sorabji v Gound (c), decided under s 276 of the Code of 1882. The view taken by the other High Courts was that C's claim, being a claim merely for rateable distribution, cannot be said to be a claim enforceable under the attachment, but this view is no longer law (d). The Explanation gives effect to the Bombay decision. But the Explanation does not apply unless the claim of the subsequent decree holder can be said to be a claim for rateable distribution within the meaning of s 73. Now the essential condition of enforcement of claims for rateable distribution under s 73 is that there should be assets held by the Court [see s 73 below] and that condition was satisfied in Sorabji v Gound. But if there be no assets received by the Court as would be the case if no payment was made by the Railway Company to the Sheriff and A's attachment came to an end [O 21, r 55] by B satisfying A's decree out of Court and then certifying it to the Court under O 21, r 2 C's claim cannot be enforced as a claim for rateable distribution, and the assignment to the attorneys will prevail over any claim that may be made by C under his subsequent attachment (e). The Explanation to the section protects only those decree holders who are entitled to rateable distribution under s 73 and no decree holder can be entitled to rateable distribution under that section unless there are assets held by the Court (f). At the same time it must be noted that it is not enough that a decree holder is entitled to rateable distribution under s 73 to bring the Explanation into play; it is further necessary that his claim must be one enforceable under the attachment within the meaning of the present section (g) see ill (4) on p 183 above. The result is that a decree holder is not entitled to the benefit of the Explanation and is not entitled to question a private alienation unless—

- (1) he is entitled to rateable distribution under s 73 for which it is absolutely necessary that there should be assets held by the Court and
- (2) where there has been a sale in execution his claim is one enforceable under the attachment under which the sale was made as explained in ill (4) on p 183 above

As regards the first condition it is obvious that it cannot be present if the judgment debtor satisfies the claim of the decree holder out of Court, and that is what happened in the undermentioned cases (A). In the Privy Council case of Mina Kumari v Bijoy Singh (1), the first condition was satisfied [rather it was assumed that it was] but the second condition was not.

Private transfer under O. 21, r. 83—A private transfer of his property by a judgment-debtor made pursuant to the provisions of O. 21, r. 83, is absolute, notwithstanding the provisions of this section, even against claims enforceable under the attachment (j).

Attachment raised and subsequently restored—Where the property of a defendant is attached, and the attachment is subsequently raised by the executing Court but the attachment is restored by the High Court on appeal, the order of the High Court relates back to the date when the attachment was first made, with the result that an alienation of the property made by the judgment debtor between the date on which the attachment was raised and that on which it was restored is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment (k). The same principle applies where the property attached by Court A is released from attachment by that Court, and it is subsequently re attached by the same Court in execution of the same decree (l).

Private sale of property attached to the decree holder—A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree B's property is attached. Pending the attachment B sells the property to C. A then buys the same property from B. Is the sale to C void under this section? No, because A bought the property not at a Court sale, but by private treaty with B. The title obtained by the purchaser on a private sale of property in satisfaction of a decree differs from that acquired upon a sale in execution. Under a private sale the purchaser derives title through the vendor, and cannot acquire a title better than his. Under an execution sale, the purchaser, notwithstanding that he acquires merely the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtor, acquires that title by operation of law adversely to the judgment debtor and freed from all alienations and incumbrances effected by him after the attachment of the property sold (m).

Effect of striking off execution proceedings or of removing them from the file—An attachment is not necessarily at an end because the execution case is struck off or removed from the file. The effect of such a proceeding depends on the circumstances of each case. Where after an attachment has been made the proceedings in execution are struck off or removed from the file under circumstances which render a fresh attachment necessary to bring the judgment debtor's property to sale a private transfer of the property by the judgment debtor made after the proceedings are struck off is valid, though the same property may subsequently be re attached in execution of the same decree on a fresh application for execution. But if the execution proceedings are struck off or removed from the file under circumstances which do not render a fresh attachment necessary the transfer is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment, and the mere fact that a fresh application for attachment is subsequently made in execution of the same decree will not render the transfer valid. The reason is that in the former case the proceedings in execution are deemed to have terminated on the same being struck off or removed from the file, and the attachment is deemed to be at an end, and the transfer having been made after the termination of the attachment, it cannot be affected by the subsequent attachment. In the latter case, however, the proceedings in execution are merely suspended, and the first attachment is therefore deemed to subsist, and the second application for attachment is a superfluity (n). Whether the execution proceedings have been struck off or removed from the file under these or those circumstances is a question of fact in each case (o). But where a fresh application for attachment is made, the presumption is that the first attachment has ceased, and the burden of proof is on the party alleging that the first attachment was still subsisting when the second application was made and that the second application was superfluous (p). If property is attached in execution of a decree obtained against him by A. The execution proceedings are then "struck off." B then sells the property to C. The property is again attached on a fresh application by A. Is the sale valid? There being a fresh application for attachment, the presumption is that the first attachment ceased from the moment the proceedings were struck off. The sale would therefore be valid and the second attachment inoperative unless A showed that the first attachment was still subsisting at the date of transfer and that the second application was superfluous.

(j) Sachinappa v. Channappa (1906) 30 Bom.

33 L. A. 111 11 Cal. 111 11 L. C. 111

The above cases would not have arisen if the Courts, instead of making an order for 'striking off proceedings' or 'removing proceedings from the file' had made an order either dismissing the application or adjourning the proceedings where the Court was, by reason of default on the part of the decree holder, unable to proceed further with the proceedings in execution. The practice of striking off proceedings or removing proceedings from the file had no justification under any of the previous Codes. To put a stop to this practice it is now expressly provided by O 21, r 57, that where any property has been attached in execution of a decree, but by reason of the decree holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it shall either dismiss the application or for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a further date, upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease. Cases like the above are not likely to arise under this Code, if the procedure prescribed by O 21, r 57, is strictly followed.

Effect of attachment—Attachment creates no charge or lien upon the attached property (q). It merely prevents and avoids private alienations, it does not confer any title on the attaching creditors (r). There is nothing in any of the provisions of the Code which in terms makes the attaching creditor a secured creditor or creates any charge or lien in his favour over the property attached (s). But an attaching creditor acquires by virtue of the attachment, a right to have the attached property kept in custodia legis for the satisfaction of his debt, and an unlawful interference with that right constitutes an actionable wrong. Thus it is an actionable wrong if A cuts and carries away crops attached by B in execution of a decree against C, and a suit will lie at B's instance against A to recover from A damages which should not, however, exceed the value of the attached property (1)

Effect of vesting order on attachment—A vesting order is an order made by the Insolvent Debtors Court whereby the whole property of the insolvent vests in the Official Assignee. What is the effect of a vesting order on an attachment levied prior to the date of the vesting order? Has the attaching creditor by reason of his prior attachment priority over the Official Assignee in respect of the property attached by him prior to the date of the vesting order or is the Official Assignee entitled to claim the attachment property by virtue of the vesting order as part of the property of the insolvent? It has been held that whether the attachment is one before judgment (u) or in execution of a decree (v) the attaching creditor has no priority over the Official Assignee and the latter is entitled to the attached property for the benefit of the creditors of the insolvent including the attaching creditors. These decisions are based on the ground that an attaching creditor does not obtain a charge or lien on the attached property, and it cannot therefore be said that the property vests in the Official Assignee subject to his claim under the decree. Once the vesting order is made the attaching creditor and other creditors of the insolvent stand on the same footing, and they are entitled to a rateable distribution out of the property of the insolvent in the hands of the Official Assignee. In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property belonging to B is attached. B is subsequently adjudicated an insolvent and a vesting order is made. The attachment will be set aside, and the property will vest in the Official Assignee for the benefit of B's creditors. This subject is dealt with in s 53 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act 1909. The provisions of that section are in accordance with the decisions prior to that enactment. See also Provincial Insolvency Act 1920 s 51.

Effect of winding up order on attachment—The position of the liquidator of a registered company differs from that of the Official Assignee in this that the property of the company does not vest in him. An attachment therefore made on the property of the company at the instance of a decree holder before the winding up of the company cannot be released at the instance of the liquidator (w).

who at the time of sale is declared to be the purchaser. Such certificate shall bear the date of the confirmation of the sale, and so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them, the title to the property sold shall vest in the purchaser from the date of such certificate and not before.

Provided that the decree under which the sale took place was still subsisting at that date."

The first part of section 316 now stands as O 21, r 94, with slight verbal alterations. The second part, with certain substantial alterations to be presently noted, stands as s 65. The proviso to s 316 has been omitted altogether.

Changes introduced in the section—Under s 316 of the Code of 1882 the title to immovable property sold at an execution sale vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate of sale, that is, the date on which the sale became absolute. Under the present section, the title to such property, where the sale has become absolute, vests in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute.

The proviso to s 316 has been omitted. It is therefore no longer necessary that the decree should be subsisting at the time of the confirmation of sale.

Vesting of property in auction-purchaser—In the case of a private sale of immovable property, the property vests in the purchaser from the time when the deed of sale is executed. The reason is that a voluntary sale becomes absolute on execution and delivery of the deed by the vendor. In the case, however, of a Court sale, the property does not vest in the purchaser immediately on the sale thereof. The reason is that a compulsory sale does not become absolute until some time after the sale. A period of at least thirty days must elapse from the date of sale before the sale can become absolute. During that period the sale is liable to be set aside at the instance of the judgment debtor on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, or on deposit by him in Court of the amount specified in the sale proclamation together with a percentage on the purchase money by way of compensation to the purchaser [O 21 rr 89 90]. The application by the judgment debtor to set aside the sale in either of these two cases must be made within 30 days from the date of sale. Where no such application is made the Court must make an order confirming the sale and it is upon such confirmation that the sale becomes absolute (O 21, s 92). After the sale has become absolute, a certificate is granted by the Court to the purchaser which is called a certificate of sale [O 21, r 94]. Such certificate bears as date the day on which the sale became absolute. It is only when the sale becomes absolute that the property sold vests in the purchaser. But though the property does not vest in the purchaser until the sale has become absolute when it does vest in him, it shall be deemed to have vested on the sale becoming absolute, from the time when it was sold. The vesting of the property is thus made to relate back to the date of sale.

Successive purchasers at sales in execution of money decrees—Under the Code of 1882, s 316, the property sold vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate of sale, and not before. This gave rise to some difficulty when the question arose as to which of two successive auction purchasers should have priority in cases where the later purchaser had the certificate of sale issued to him first. Had the question been determined with exclusive reference to the terms of that section, the priority would have rested with the purchaser who first procured the certificate of sale. But this inequitable result was avoided, and the difficulty was got over by holding that the first purchaser had by his prior purchase obtained an equitable interest in the property, and that the subsequent purchaser must be deemed to have purchased the property subject to such interest (x) No such difficulty can arise under this Code for it is provided by the present section that the property is to be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the date of sale, and not from the date of the certificate of sale

Illustration

In execution of a money decree obtained by A against B, certain immovable property belonging to B is sold and purchased by P1. The same property is subsequently purchased by P2 at a sale in execution of a money decree obtained by C against B. P2 obtains a certificate of sale first, and is placed in possession of the property. Subsequently P1 obtains a certificate of sale and sues P2 for possession. Under the present section P1 is entitled to possession, for the property is to be deemed to have vested in him from the date of sale, and the sale to him was prior to the sale to P2. The same result was arrived at under the Code of 1882 by holding that P2 bought subject to P1's equitable interest and he could not therefore retain possession against P1 after P1's title was perfected by the issue of a certificate to him.

But where property is sold in execution of a decree to P1, and the sale is set aside on the ground of irregularity under O 21, r 90 and the same property is subsequently sold in execution of another decree and is purchased by P2, P2 is entitled to priority as against P1, even though the sale to P1 may subsequently be confirmed. The sale to P1 not having been confirmed until after the sale to P2 P1 is not entitled to priority over P2. Even under the Code of 1882 P1 would not be entitled to priority over P2, for the sale to him (P1) having been set aside, it could not be said that P2 purchased subject to P1's interest in the property. P1 had no interest in the property when it was sold to P2 (y).

Successive purchasers at sales in execution of mortgage decrees— Priority between successive purchasers of the same mortgaged property in execution of mortgage decrees against the same mortgagor is determined by the dates of the several purchases, and not by the dates of the several mortgages (z).

Suit for possession by auction-purchaser.—It was held under the Code of 1859 that a purchaser of immovable property at a Court sale could not maintain a suit for possession thereof against a third person, unless he had a certificate of sale issued to him before suit, although the sale had become absolute. The reason given was that the transfer of property to a purchaser at a Court sale was not complete until a certificate of sale was issued to him. The decisions turned upon the language of s 250 which provided that "the certificate shall be taken and deemed to be a valid transfer of such right, title and interest" as had passed from the judgment debtor to the purchaser. The line of reasoning adopted was that if a certificate was to be taken as a transfer, the transaction must necessarily be incomplete until the certificate was issued. The said words were construed as controlling the operation of s 256 which provided that a sale became absolute when it was confirmed by the Court (a). But it was held that as against the judgment-debtor and his representatives the purchaser's title became complete on the confirmation of the sale (b). Under the present section, it seems that an auction purchaser can maintain a suit for possession even against a person not a party to the suit after the sale is confirmed by the Court though no certificate has been issued to him.

before the institution of the suit, provided it is produced at or before the passing of the decree. The reason is that property under the present section vests in the purchaser immediately the sale is confirmed by the Court and the vesting is not postponed until the grant of a certificate. In a case under the Code of 1859 where the equity of redemption of the judgment debtor was sold, it was held that the purchaser was entitled to sue the mortgagee for redemption even before the issue of the certificate, the reason given being that the suit was not one in ejectment on title, but one for redemption and therefore of an equitable nature, and the purchaser was equitably entitled to redeem. The certificate in that case was produced at the hearing (c).

Mesne-profits—Under the Code of 1882, the property sold vested in the purchaser from the date of the sale certificate and not before. Hence it was held that the purchaser was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the certificate, and not from the date of sale (d). Under the present section the property is to be deemed to vest in the purchaser from the date of sale. The purchaser, therefore, is entitled to mesne profits from the date of sale.

Title of auction-purchaser.—Under the Code of 1882, property sold in execution of a decree vested in the purchaser so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them. That is to say, a purchaser at a Court sale was entitled to hold the property only against the judgment debtor and his representative but not against third parties. The words italicized above, which occurred in s. 316 of the Code of 1882, have been omitted in the present section. The omission, however, has not the effect of enlarging the purchaser's rights, and a purchaser at a judicial sale will now as before get a good title only against persons bound by the decree, but not against strangers (e).

Sale when void, and when voidable—A sale in execution of a decree is void, if the Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property. Thus a Court has no jurisdiction to sell property in execution of a decree if the notice required by O 21, r 22, is not served (f). Similarly a Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property of a person who was not a party to the suit in which the property was sold or properly represented on the record (g). Again, the Court of first instance has no jurisdiction to sell property after an order is made by the appellate Court for stay of execution (h). In each of these cases the sale is a nullity, and may be disregarded without any proceeding to set it aside (i).

But where a Court has jurisdiction to sell the property, and there has been an irregularity in the course of execution proceedings, the sale is not void, but merely voidable. Thus where the notice required by O 21, r 22, is served upon a person who was not in fact the legal representative of the deceased judgment debtor, but whom the Court wrongly held to be his legal representative, the sale is voidable, and not void (j). Similarly a sale is voidable and not void if there has been material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale, {O 21, r 90}

Irregularities of procedure in obtaining decrees or in execution proceedings—Provided that the Court has jurisdiction to sell, a purchaser at a Court sale is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the decree or of the order for sale. "To hold that a purchaser at a sale in execution is bound to inquire into such matters would throw a great impediment in the way of purchasers under executions. If the Court has jurisdiction, a purchaser is no more bound to inquire into the correctness of an order for execution than he is as to the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues" (l). "Strangers to a suit are justified in believing that the Court has done that which, by the direction of the Code, it ought to do" (f). Therefore, when property sold in execution of a decree under the order of a competent Court is purchased by a stranger bona fide and for value, the sale cannot be set aside on the ground that the judgment debtor had a cross decree of a higher amount and the Court therefore ought not to have directed the sale (m), or that the decree had been satisfied out of Court before the sale (n), or that the Court wrongly held that the defendant was served with the summons and on that finding passed an ex parte decree against him (o), or that though an attachment was subsisting at the date of the sale, the decree holder's application for an order of sale had been dismissed for want of prosecution before sale (p), or that the property was not liable to attachment and sale within the meaning of s. 60 (q), or that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation (r), or that the decree proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law (s) or that the decree was one which the Court ought not to have passed (t). See notes to s. 60, "Objection to attachment that property not saleable when to be raised, on p. 177 above, notes to O 21, r. 22, 'Consequence of omission to give notice, and 'Notice to wrong person,' and notes to O 21, r. 90, 'Material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale'.

The above principles apply in favour of a third party purchasing at a Court sale. They do not apply where the decree holder himself is the purchaser. The reason is that where the decree holder himself is the purchaser, he 'must be held to have had notice of all the facts' relating to the suit and execution proceedings (u). Nor do they apply in favour of a party to the suit, though he may not be a decree holder (v2).

Effect of reversal of decree upon sale where decree reversed after confirmation of sale—There is a great distinction between decree holders who come in and purchase under their own decree which is afterwards reversed or modified, and bona fide purchasers who come in and buy at a sale in execution of the decree to which they are no parties, and at a time when that decree is a valid and subsisting decree and when the order for sale is a valid order. A bona fide purchaser, who is a stranger to the decree does not lose his title to the property by the subsequent reversal or modification of the decree. But where the decree holder himself is the purchaser, the sale may be set aside if the decree is subsequently reversed or modified. Where the purchaser is a stranger, the judgment-debtor whose property is sold is entitled only to the sale proceeds of the property if the decree is subsequently reversed. But where the purchaser is the decree holder, he is bound to restore the property to the judgment debtor (t). "A sale in execution of a decree at which a third party becomes the purchaser is upheld, notwithstanding the subsequent reversal of the decree, because otherwise there will be less inducement to intending purchasers to buy at an execution sale and consequently less chance of property fetching proper value at such sales (w). See notes to s 144, 'Who may apply for restitution.' But where property sold in execution of a decree is bought by the decree holder, and it is subsequently re sold by him to a bona fide purchaser for value, such purchaser acquires a good title, though the decree may be subsequently reversed (x).

Effect of reversal of decree upon sale where decree reversed before confirmation of sale—On referring to s 316 of the Code of 1882 (p 188), it will be observed that it contained a proviso the effect whereof was stated to be that a sale could not be confirmed if, at the time of application for confirmation, the decree under which the sale was effected had ceased to be a subsisting decree (y). That proviso has not been reproduced in the present section. Under the present section, therefore a sale held in execution of a decree may be confirmed in any event where the purchaser is a third party, though the decree has been reversed before confirmation of the sale. See O 21, r 92 (1), and note the words, 'the Court shall make an order confirming the sale'.

Changes introduced by the section —

- 1 The words "on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims" have been substituted for the words "on behalf of any other person or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims". See notes, "Joint purchase," on p 197 below
- 2 The latter part of sub section (2) is new. See notes below under the head "Suit by a third person for a declaration that the certified purchaser is merely a benamidar"

Benami purchases—The object of the section is to put a stop to benami purchases at execution sales (a). If A under a secret understanding with B purchases property with his own money, but in B's name, the purchase is said to be benami. In such a case B is merely a benamidar or ostensible owner and holds the property in trust for A, so that A may compel B to transfer the property to him (A). If, however, A's object in purchasing the property in B's name was to defraud his creditors and the object of the fraud is carried out, the Court will not help A in recovering possession of the property from B. But if the object of the fraud is not carried out, the Court will help A in recovering possession of the property from B notwithstanding A's primary intention to effect a fraud. This is the law as applicable to benami purchases at a private sale (a). But the law is different in the case of benami purchases at a Court sale so that if A purchases property in B's name at a Court sale, and a certificate of sale is issued to B (O 21, s. 94), B will be conclusively deemed to be the real purchaser as against A, and no suit will lie under this section by A against B for possession of the property, unless A can prove that B's name was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without his consent [see sub section (2)]. The same rule applies even if the claim made by the beneficial owner may not be for the whole of the property of which the defendant is the certified purchaser. Thus if B is the certified purchaser of certain property, part of which was purchased by him on his own account, and part benami for A, A is not entitled to maintain a suit under this section for recovery of the part purchased by B benami for him (b). At the same time it should be noted that the mere fact that the plaintiff has described the defendant as a benamidar does not make the transaction benami if it was not benami in fact, it is a mere misdescription, and it is no ground for refusing the plaintiff a relief to which he is otherwise entitled (c).

This section must be construed strictly—Where a transaction is once made out to be benami, the Courts of India, which are bound to decide according to equity and good conscience, will deal with it in the same manner as it would be treated by an English Court of equity (d). That is to say, effect will be given to the real and not to the nominal title, unless the result of doing so would be to work a fraud upon innocent persons (e). The present section provides that when property is sold at a Court sale, no suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made benami. It provides in effect that the certified purchaser shall be conclusively deemed to be the real purchaser, and shall not be liable to be ousted on the ground that his purchase was really made on behalf of another. In other words the provisions of the present section bar the equitable jurisdiction of the Courts. The section, therefore, must be construed strictly and not extended beyond its express terms. But though the section prohibits suits against the certified purchaser to assert a benami title against him, it does not make benami purchases illegal. The object of the stringent provisions of this section is to discourage benami purchases at Court sales, but not to render such purchases illegal (f)

Scope of the section: Suits outside the section—This section provides that no suit shall be against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff. In other words, it is only in suits against the certified purchaser as defendant that such purchaser is to be conclusively deemed to be the real purchaser. Hence if the real owner is actually and honestly in possession, and a suit is brought by the certified purchaser as plaintiff against the real owner for possession or for rents and profits of the property of which he is the certified purchaser, the real owner may resist the suit on the ground that the certified purchaser was only a benamidar (g). And since the section bars suits brought against the certified purchaser as defendant, a suit by such purchaser as plaintiff for a declaration that he purchased the property on his own behalf and not benami for another, is not barred under this section (h). On the same ground this section is no bar to a suit by the beneficial owner for possession against the judgment debtor pursuant to an agreement made between them after the sale of the property, provided the certified purchaser is joined as a party to the suit, and he does not claim the property (i). In fact, the present section applies only when a suit is instituted by a person claiming to be the real purchaser as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant, on the allegation that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims. This point is now made clear by the substitution of the word "plaintiff" for the words "any other person" in sub section (1)

Suit by "a third person" for a declaration that the certified purchaser is merely a benamidar.—Under the corresponding s 317 of the Code of 1892, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the only suits barred under that section were suits brought by the beneficial owner as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant, and that suits brought by a third party as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant for a declaration that the property, though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser, is liable to satisfy a claim of such third party against the beneficial owner, were not barred under that section (j). On the other hand, it was held by the High Courts of Madras (k) and Allahabad (l) that suits even of the latter description, that is, suits brought by a third person as plaintiff were barred under that section. The present section gives effect to the Calcutta decisions by providing in sub section (2) that "nothing in this section shall interfere with the right of a third person to proceed against that (sic) property, though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser, on the ground that it is liable to satisfy a claim of such third person against the real owner"

A obtains a decree against B, and attaches certain property alleged to belong to B. C objects to the attachment, alleging that he is the certified purchaser of the property, having purchased the same at a Court sale held in execution of a decree obtained against B by D. A alleges that the property was purchased by C benami for B, and sues C for a declaration that C was merely the benamidar for B. The suit is not barred under this section, for it is a suit not by the beneficial owner, but by a third person.

Suit by beneficial owner in possession for declaration of title—There is a conflict of opinion whether a suit by a beneficial owner in possession for a declaration of his right to the property against the certified purchaser is barred under this section. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in a case under s. 317 of the Code of 1882, that such a suit is not barred under that section (m). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that such a suit is barred under that section (n). A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is sold. B himself purchases the property, but the purchase is made in O's name. The certificate of sale is granted to C, but B continues in possession of the property. After a few years C gives notice to the tenants not to pay rent to B. B thereupon sues C for a declaration that he is the real purchaser and for an injunction restraining C from interfering with his tenants. The suit is not barred according to the Calcutta decision. It is barred according to the Allahabad decision. In the Calcutta case, the Court said "It is not a case in which the plaintiff seeks to obtain a decree for possession against the ostensible purchaser. Resting as it does on an existing possession we do not think that it is a suit of the nature prohibited by s. 317." As to this it was observed by Strachey, C.J., in the Allahabad case cited above: "If the learned Judges in that case meant to lay down that s. 317 applies only where the plaintiff being out of possession, seeks to recover possession from a certified purchaser, and can never apply to a suit by a plaintiff in possession for a declaration that the certified purchaser out of possession was not the real purchaser, I cannot agree with them." Banerji, J., said "The first paragraph [of the section] is not confined to a suit for recovery of possession only." The correctness of the Calcutta decision was doubted by the same Court in the undermentioned case (o), but the principle of that decision was followed by the same Court in a later case (p). It was held in the last mentioned case that where a Mahomedan father purchases property at a Court sale with his own money in the name of one of his sons, and then lets the property to a tenant and the tenant pays rent to him, this section is no bar to a suit by the other sons against the tenant and the son in whose name the property was bought for recovery of rent after his father's death. It is settled law, however, that where the beneficial owner has been in possession for twelve years or more, a suit will lie at his instance against the benamidar for a declaration of his title to the property. The basis of such a suit is the plaintiff's title by possession. The suit is based, not on the ground that the defendant is a benamidar, but on the title by possession. Such a suit does not come within the purview of this section (q).

Person claiming through beneficial owner—This section precludes a suit by the beneficial owner or one claiming through him. It does not preclude a suit by a person who does not claim through the beneficial owner, but claims through another person (r).

Joint purchase.—The provisions of this section are designed “to create some check on the practice of making what are called benami purchases at execution sales for the benefit of judgment debtors, and in no way affect the title of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchase” (s). It has accordingly been held that where one of several holders of a joint mortgage decree applies for execution of the decree under O 21, r 15, subject to the rights of the other decree holders, and purchases the mortgaged property at the execution sale, the other decree holders are entitled to a declaration that the purchase was made on behalf of all the decree holders (t). And this is a fortiori the case when the purchase money is set off against the entire amount of the debt, in other words, the purchase is made with the use of joint funds (u).

Where property is purchased at a Court sale by a member of a joint Hindu family in his name, but with family funds, the other members are entitled to sue him for a declaration that the purchase was made on behalf of the family, though the certificate of sale stands also in his name. The provisions of the section do not apply to such a case. It was so held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bodh Singh v Guneesh Chunder (v), a case under the Code of 1859. Their Lordships said “ [The provisions of the section] cannot be taken to affect the rights of members of a joint Hindu family who, by the operation of law and not by virtue of any private agreement or undertaking [such as exists between a benamidar and the beneficial owner], are entitled to treat as part of their common property an acquisition, however made, by a member of the family in his sole name if made by the use of the family funds.” The same principle applies where the parties stand in the relation of partners, and the purchase is made by one of the partners in his name with partnership funds (w). Suppose now that a joint Hindu family consists of A and his sons, and A purchases property at a Court sale with joint family funds without the concurrence of his sons in the name of a third person, are the sons entitled to recover their share of the property from the third person [certified purchaser]? It has been held by the High Court of Madras (x), that they are, the reason given being that the purchase cannot in such a case be said to have been made by the father on behalf of the other members of the family, and the sons are not therefore beneficial owners, and the section therefore is no bar to a suit by them. On the other hand, it has been held by the Allahabad High Court, that if a managing member makes a purchase in the name of a third person, though without the consent of his sons, the purchase must be deemed to have been made “on behalf of all the members of the family within the meaning of this section, and the sons are precluded by this section from maintaining the suit (y).” The Allahabad High Court purports to follow the Privy Council ruling in Suraj Narain v Ratan Lal (z). But that case, as pointed out by the Madras High Court, was a case under s 317 of the Code of 1882, which contained the words “on behalf of any other person,” now altered into “on behalf of the plaintiff.”

Waiver by certified purchaser of his right to possession.—It has been held by the High Court of Madras, that if after obtaining a certificate of sale, the purchaser acknowledges that his purchase is benami, and gives up possession, or does some act which clearly indicates an intention to waive his right, or restores the property to the beneficial owner, such act may, by reason of the antecedent relation between the parties, operate as a valid transfer of the property from the purchaser to the beneficial owner. Thus if A is the manager of B's estate

S. 66. [and this is the antecedent relation between the parties], and the estate is sold in execution of a decree against B, and is purchased by B in A's name, a suit will lie at the instance of B against A for possession, if, after obtaining the certificate of sale, A delivers possession of the property to B, and then disturbs B in his possession. The reason given is that the permission to hold possession amounts to a transfer of title from the benamidar to the beneficial owner and the suit is thus based not on the ground that the purchase was benami but on a fresh title created by the transfer (a). The High Court of Allahabad has dissented from this view, and held, relying on the Privy Council case of Lohree v Kallyraddo (b), that the mere permission to hold possession cannot give or transfer a title from the benamidar to the real owner, and that a suit like the above would be barred under this section (c). The Calcutta High Court has followed the Allahabad decision (d).

Suit for specific performance against certified purchaser.—It has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Venkatappa v Jalayya (e), that the present section does not debar a plaintiff from maintaining a suit for specific performance against the certified purchaser if the plaintiff's claim is based upon an agreement to convey the property made after the purchase. The decision in Venkatappa's case was approved by the Judicial Committee in Ramatbai v Persa (f). In Ramatbai's case it was held that the present section does not debar a plaintiff from maintaining a suit for specific performance against the certified purchaser if the plaintiff's claim is based upon an agreement made after the purchase to transfer the property to the plaintiff in pursuance of an agreement made before it. The suit in such cases is not brought 'on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff' within the meaning of this section.

Certified purchaser.—Where a purchaser, who had not obtained a certificate, was sued, and afterwards applied for and obtained a certificate, it was held that he was a certified purchaser within the meaning of this section (g).

Successor in title of certified purchaser.—This section bars a suit not only against a certified purchaser, but also against persons claiming title from him (h). Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether s. 317 of that Code was a bar to suits against persons claiming title from the certified purchaser. On the one hand it was held by the High Courts of Madras, Allahabad and Calcutta, that the expression 'certified purchaser' in s. 317 of that Code did not include a person claiming through or under the certified purchaser, such as an heir or an assignee (i), and that that section therefore was no bar to a suit against such person. On the other hand, it was held by the Bombay High Court that the expression "certified purchaser" included his successor in title (j). The present section contains a legislative recognition of the view taken by the High Court of Bombay (k). It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the present section does not apply to an execution purchaser whose title was perfected when s. 317 of the Code of 1882 was in force (l).

Every notification issued in the exercise of the powers conferred by this sub-section shall set out the rules so continued or modified.

DELEGATION TO COLLECTOR OF POWER TO EXECUTE DECREES AGAINST IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY.

68. [S. 320, 1st para.] The Local Government may declare, by notification in the local official Gazette, that in any local area the execution of decrees in cases in which a Court has ordered any immoveable property to be sold, or the execution of any particular kind of such decrees, or the execution of decrees ordering the sale of any particular kind of, or interest in, immoveable property, shall be transferred to the Collector.

Power to prescribe rules for transferring to Collector execution of certain decrees

Object of the section—"The object of these provisions [i.e., provisions relating to the execution of decrees by Collectors] is well known. In different parts of India, the effect of sales in execution of decrees was to transfer landed estates from the old families to modern speculators. A strong opinion was entertained by certain members of the Government of India, that these results of the administration of civil justice were impolitic and inexpedient, and it was suggested that some procedure might be devised by which the Chief Executive Officer of the district would be enabled to liquidate the debts of encumbered land holders without the immediate sale of their

Jurisdiction of Civil Courts barred

Power of Local Government to make rules.—A Local Government has power under this section to make a rule providing that no suit shall lie to set aside a sale held or confirmed by a Revenue Authority. Such a rule is not ultra vires (o).

Civil Courts are precluded from interfering in any matter declared by notification to be within the Collector's jurisdiction.—Thus if it is declared by notification that a decree for the sale of a particular kind of property, e.g., "ancestral" property, should be transferred to the Collector for execution, a sale of the property, if made, by a Civil Court, is void. Such a notification ousts the jurisdiction of the Court so far as regards the execution of the decree (p). For the same reason, if the execution of a decree is transferred to the Collector, the Court transferring the decree has no power to postpone the sale (q), or to give leave to the decree holder to bid under O 21, r 72 (r), or to re sell the property where a re sale is necessary (s), the Collector alone has that power. Similarly where a decree is transferred for execution to the Collector, and the decree is subsequently adjusted, the application under O 21, r 2 [Code of 1882, s 259] for recording the adjustment should be made to the Collector (t). But where a decree has been sent to the Collector for execution under this section, he holds the money which may be realized in execution of such decree at the disposal of the Court which sent the decree to him for execution, and he is not competent to distribute such money in contravention of an order of the Court indicating the mode of distribution (u).

It is to be noted that sub section (2) does not take away the jurisdiction of any Court other than the Court referred to in it. The Court there referred to is the Court mentioned in the previous portion of the section, namely, the Court to which an application was made for execution and which as such Court transmitted the decree for execution (v).

Where a suit would lie to set aside an order made by a Court executing a decrees the fact that such order has been made by the Collector does not deprive the Civil Court of the jurisdiction to entertain a suit from such order (w).

Suit to set aside order of Collector—A suit will lie to set aside an order made by the Collector, if the order is ultra vires. Thus there is no rule made by the Government of Bombay under this section empowering the Collector to set aside a sale under O 21, r 89 [Code of 1882, s 310A] on a deposit by the judgment debtor of the amount specified in that rule, nor is there any rule empowering him to set aside a sale under O 21, r 90 [Code of 1882, s 311] on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale (x). Nor is there any rule made by the Local Government of the N. W. P., under this section empowering the Collector to set aside a sale under O 21, r 89 [Code of 1882, s 310A] (y), though there is a rule empowering him to set aside a sale under O 21, r 90 [Code of 1882, s 311]. Again, there is no rule made by any of the Local Governments empowering the Collector to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud (z). If in any of these cases the Collector arrogates to himself the power which he has not, and sets aside the sale, the order is ultra vires, and it is competent to the auction purchaser to bring a regular suit in a Civil Court for a declaration that the sale was valid, and that the order of the Collector setting aside the sale was invalid (a)

Appeal—No appeal lies to the High Court from an order passed by the Collector in an execution proceeding transferred to him under this section. The reason is that this section specially provides that an appeal shall lie from the order of the Collector to such authorities as the local Government may by rules prescribe (b)

Revision—An order made by the Collector in the course of execution proceedings under this section sanctioning the prosecution of a party to the suit under s. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is an order made by him as a Revenue Court, and is not therefore subject to revision by the High Court (c)

71. [S. 320, 5th para] In executing a decree transferred to the Collector under section 68 the Collector and his subordinates shall be deemed to be acting judicially.

Collector deemed to be acting judicially

"Shall be deemed to be acting judicially"—The result is that the Collector and his subordinates are entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the Judicial Officers Protection Act XVIII of 1850 which are as follows—

'No Judge, Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, Collector, or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court for any act done or ordered to be done by him in the discharge of his judicial duty, whether or not within the limits of his jurisdiction, provided that he at the time, in good faith, believed himself to have jurisdiction to do or order the act complained of, and no officer of any Court or other person bound to execute the lawful warrants or orders of any such Judge, Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, Collector or other person acting judicially, shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court, for the execution of any warrant or order, which he would be bound to execute if within the jurisdiction of the person issuing the same'

72. [S. 326.] (1) Where in any local area in which no declaration under section 68 is in force the property attached consists of land or of a share in land, and the Collector represents to the Court that the public sale of the land or share is objectionable and that satisfaction of the decree may be made within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation of the land or share, the Court may authorize the Collector to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended by him instead of proceeding to a sale of the land or share.

(2) In every such case the provisions of sections 69 to 71 and of any rules made in pursuance thereof shall apply so far as they are applicable.

cised upon materials placed before the Court. It is therefore open to the decree holder to place those materials in the shape of evidence before the Civil Court, and to satisfy the Court as well by evidence as by argument that the proposal of the Collector is not feasible or practicable. The Court should not decline to receive the evidence offered by the decree holder (d)

Temporary alienation.—This section admits only of a temporary alienation of land, and not an arrangement by which possession is to be left with the judgment-debtor subject to payment of the judgment debt by instalments (e)

A temporary alienation of land belonging to a judgment debtor who is a member of an agricultural tribe does not come within the purview of s 16 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act 13 of 1900 which prohibits a sale out and out (f)

Provisions of sections 69 to 71 to apply—Reading this section with para 2 of schedule III [Code of 1882, s 322] referred to in s 69, it is clear that the provisions of this section cannot be applied to a decree which directs the sale of land in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same (g). Similarly reading this section with para 11, sub para (1) of schedule III [Code of 1882, s 352A], it follows that where a judgment debtor executes a mortgage of his property, while the property is in the management of a Collector under this section, with an undertaking to put the mortgagee in possession, the mortgagee is not entitled to claim possession (h). Like wise, reading this section with the same paragraph, no Court can issue any process of execution against any immoveable property in the management of a Collector under this section. Therefore, the period during which the property is in the management of the Collector under this section should be excluded from the period of limitation applicable to the decree of which execution is refused by the Court by reason of the property having been in the Collector's management (i) see sch III, para 11, sub para (3)

73. [S 295] (1) Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons

- (b) where any property liable to be sold in execution of a decree is subject to mortgage or charge, the Court may, with the consent of the mortgagee or incumbrancer, order that the property be sold free from the mortgage or charge, giving to the mortgagee or incumbrancer the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold
- (c) where any immoveable property is sold in execution of a decree ordering its sale for the discharge of an incumbrance thereon, the proceeds of sale shall be applied—
- first, in defraying the expenses of the sale,
 - secondly, in discharging the amount due under the decree,
 - thirdly in discharging the interest and principal moneys due on subsequent incumbrances (if any), and,
 - fourthly, rateably among the holders of decrees for the payment of money against the judgment debtor, who have, prior to the sale of the property, applied to the Court which passed the decree ordering such sale for execution of such decrees, and have not obtained satisfaction thereof

(2) Where all or any of the assets liable to be rateably distributed under this section are paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets

(3) Nothing in this section affects any right of the Government

Changes introduced by the section—The present section differs from the corresponding s. 295 C P C 1889 in the following respects —

- 1 The words "where assets are held by a Court" have been substituted for the words "whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree". This it is submitted introduces an important alteration though the High Court of Bombay has held otherwise. See notes. Assets held by a Court on p. 207 below
- 2 The words "before the receipt of such assets" have been substituted for the words "prior to the realization". See notes. Before the receipt of the assets on p. 206 below
- 3 The word, "passed" has been added after the word "money". See notes. Same judgment-debtor on p. 214 below

- 4 The words, "interest in," in cl (b) have been substituted for the words, "right against," to bring the wording of that clause into line with the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s 96. This is a mere verbal alteration

Rateable distribution—The object of this section is to provide a cheap and expeditious remedy for the execution of money decrees held against the same judgment debtor by adjusting the claims of rival decree holders without the necessity for separate proceedings (j). Under the Code of 1859 (s 270), the creditor who first attached property had a prior claim to have his decree satisfied out of the sale proceeds to the exclusion of other creditors, but now all judgment creditors who apply to the Court prior to the receipt of the sale proceeds by the Court, are entitled to share rateably (k). In Bithal Das v Nand Kishore (l), Strachey, C J, said 'The object of the section is two fold. The first object is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings, to obviate, in a case where there are many decree holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property, the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately selling that property. The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree holders in the position I have described upon the same footing, and making the property rateably divisible among them instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property'. A obtains a decree against B in Court X for Rs 4 000, and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of certain property belonging to B, and the property is thereupon attached. C then obtains a decree also against B in Court A for Rs 2 000, and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of the same property attached in execution of A's decree. The property is then sold by the Court in execution of A's decree for Rs 3,000. C is entitled to share rateably in the net sale proceeds, that is to say, if the net sale proceeds amount to Rs 3 000, A will be paid Rs 2,000 and C will be paid Rs 1,000. It is not necessary to entitle C to participate in the assets that he should have given notice to A of the application made by him for execution of his decree (m).

Conditions for rateable distribution—To entitle a decree holder to participate in the assets of a judgment debtor, the following conditions must be present—

- 1 The decree holder claiming to share in the rateable distribution should have applied for execution of his decree to the Court by which the assets are held
- 2 Such application should have been made prior to the receipt of the assets by the Court
- 3 The assets of which a rateable distribution is claimed must be assets held by the Court.
- 4 The attaching creditor as well as the decree holder claiming to participate in the assets should be holders of decrees for the payment of money
- 5 Such decrees should have been obtained against the same judgment-debtor

No rateable distribution can be claimed under the section unless all the conditions enumerated above are present. We proceed to examine these conditions.

1 Court to which application for execution should be made—

Those decree holders alone are entitled to rateable distribution who have applied for execution of their decrees in the form prescribed by O 21, s 11[(Code of 1882, s 235] to the Court by which the assets are held (n).

The point to be considered under this head is whether where property of the same judgment debtor is attached in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, and the property is sold by the Court of the highest grade, the holders of decrees of inferior Courts are bound, in order that they may be entitled to rateable distribution, to have their decrees transferred to the Court of the highest grade and make a fresh application for execution to that Court. A obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the First Class. In execution of the decree B's property is attached by that Court. C then obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the Second Class and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of the same property. The property is then sold by the First Class Subordinate Judge in execution of A's decree, and the sale proceeds are received by that Court. Here the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class is the Court by which the assets are held. Is C entitled to rateable distribution? No according to the High Court of Bombay he not having applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class for execution of the decree, that being the Court by which the assets are held. (o) Yes, according to the Calcutta (p) and Madras High Courts (q), the reason given being that under s. 63 the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class is the Court to determine all claims relating to the attached property and such claims include claims for rateable distribution.

2 Before the receipt of the assets.—The application for execution must be made before the receipt of the assets by the Court. The corresponding s. 295 of the Code of 1882 commenced as follows—

‘Whenever assets are realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree, and more persons than one have, prior to the realisation, applied to the Court by which such assets are held’

The present section begins as follows—

‘Where assets are held by a Court, and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court’

The word “realization” was rather obscure. Indeed it called for several decisions in which the Courts had to define its precise meaning. The word “receipt” which is now substituted for “realization” is not likely to require any judicial interpretation. Cases of the character noted below which turned upon the word “realization” are not likely to arise under the present section, so clear is the meaning of the word “receipt”.

A, B and C held each a money decree against the same judgment debtor. In December 1892, A attached by a prohibitory order funds of the judgment-debtor in the hands of D [O 21, r 46, Code of 1882, s 268]. In January 1893, B attached the same funds in execution of his decree. In February 1893, D paid the funds into Court. On the same day, but after payment was made into Court, C applied to attach the funds as property in the custody of the Court [O 21, r 52, Code of 1882, s 272]. It was held under s. 295 of the Code of 1882 that the funds should be rateably distributed between A and B, and that C was not entitled to participate therein, as his application was made subsequent to the realization of the assets by the Court (r). The decision would be the same under the present section, for it is quite clear that C's application was made after the receipt of the assets by the Court.

It was held under s. 295 of the Code of 1882 that where property is sold in execution of a decree, the sale proceeds are deemed to be realized not when the 25 per cent is deposited by the purchaser into Court under s 306 [now O 21, r 84], but when the balance of the purchase money is paid (s). Hence a decree holder who applied for execution before the entire amount due from the purchaser had been paid into Court was held entitled to share in the rateable distribution, though the application was made after deposit of the 25 per cent. But it was held that a decree holder who applied for execution after the entire amount of the purchase-money had been paid into Court was not entitled to share in the rateable distribution though his application was made before the sale was confirmed by the Court under s 312 [now O 21, r 92], and the decision was put on the ground that the point of time when assets are realized is when the sale proceeds are paid into Court, and not when the sale becomes absolute (t). The result is the same under the present section as will be seen by substituting the word "received" for the word "realized" (u).

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that where immovable property is sold in execution of a decree in separate parcels the sale proceeds are not deemed to be realized until the entire amount of the purchase money in respect of all the parcels is paid into Court (v). This decision was followed by the Calcutta High Court (w), but in a later case that Court held that where immovable property is sold in separate parcels, the sale proceeds are deemed to be realized on the several dates on which they are received by the Court (x). As regards moveables it has been held by the Lahore Court that if the property consists exclusively of moveables, and they are sold in separate lots on different dates the sale proceeds are deemed to be realized on the several dates on which they are received by the Officer of the Court and not on the date on which the last payment is received. Thus if some of the moveables are sold and the price thereof is received on January 5 and the rest are sold and the price thereof is received on January 10, a decree holder who applies for rateable distribution on January 7 is entitled to rateable distribution of the sale proceeds realized on January 10 but not of those realized on January 5 (y).

Where property is sold in execution by a person appointed by the Court under O 21, r 60, the receipt of purchase money by such person is for the purposes of this section equivalent to receipt of assets by the Court. The material date, therefore, is not the date on which the Court receives the amount of the purchase money from such person, but the date on which such person receives the purchase money from the purchaser (z).

Sale by Collector—Where the sale is held by the Collector, the application for execution must be made before the sale proceeds are received by him though he may send the sale proceeds to the Court under Sch. III, cl 9, at a later date (a).

3 Assets held by a Court—Far more important than the change effected by the word receipt is the change introduced by the omission of the words when ever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree, and the substitution thereof of the words where assets are held by a Court. The latter words, coupled with the word realization which occurs later on in the section include,

5. 73. it is submitted, several kinds of assets which were held not liable to rateable distribution under s 295 of the Code of 1882

Assets available for rateable distribution.—The only kinds of assets that were held to be available for rateable distribution under s 295 were —

- (a) assets realized by "sale in execution of a decree," that is, sale proceeds of property sold in execution of a decree (b), and
- (b) assets realized "otherwise in execution of a decree" These words were held to mean assets realized from the property of the judgment debtor by such modes as those prescribed by s 291 [O 21, r 69], s 305 [O 21, r 83], and s 322 [Sch III, paras 2 and 7] (c) This was explained in later decisions meaning assets realized in one of the modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code (d) The following were held to be assets of this class —
 - (i) debts attached under s 203 [now O 21, r 46] and paid into Court by the garnishee (e),
 - (ii) rents of property under attachment realized by a receiver appointed under s 503 [now s 51 cl (d)] at the instance of the decree holder (f). [The appointment of a receiver by the Court in such a case is a "process of execution"],
 - (iii) money in the custody of a public officer attached under s 272 [now O 21, r 52] and paid into Court by that officer (g),
 - (iv) money realized in execution of a decree held by the judgment debtor against another, where such decree is attached and realized under O 21, r 53 [Code of 1882, s. 273] (h),
 - (v) money paid under O 21, r 69, to the officer conducting the sale to stop the sale (i),
 - (vi) money raised by the judgment debtor by private alienation under O 21, r 83, and paid into Court (j)

Assets not available for rateable distribution—Assets not realized "by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" were not liable to rateable distribution under s 295 The following are instances of assets held not to be realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree " within the meaning of s 295, and therefore not subject to rateable distribution under that section —

Cases under s. 295 of the Code of 1882.

A — Purshotamdass v Surajbharthi (1882) 6 Bom 588—Money paid by a judgment-debtor under arrest under s 236 of the old Code [now s 55, proviso 4] to the officer arresting him in order to secure his release were held to be assets not subject to rateable distribution Sir Charles Sargent, C J, said "Section 295 must be read as if the words 'from the property of the judgment debtor' were inserted after the word 'realized' The provisions contained in sections 291 [O XXI, r 83], 305 [O XXI, r 69] and 322 [now Sch III, paras 2 and 7, the latter para corresponding with § 323 of the old Code] are all modes of realizing assets from such property 'otherwise' than by sale, and are sufficient to account for the introduction of that expression into section 295 " The effect of the above decision is that to constitute a realization within the meaning of s 295, it must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court or it must be a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code

This was the leading case under the old section, and it was followed in cases B, C, D and E below

The correctness of the reasoning in Parshotamdas' case seems to have been doubted in Manilal v Nanabhai (1) where Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C J, said " Prima facie the word 'realized' implies that property has been converted into or obtained in cash or some other form available for immediate distribution, and there is nothing in the word itself which requires that that process should take place as the result of any ulterior proceeding in the course of execution "

B—Gopal Dei v Chunnai (1886) 8 All 67, following case A—Money paid into Court by the judgment debtor under s 275 of the old Code [now O XXI, r 55 (a)] for payment of the amount due to the decree holder at whose instance the property was attached was held to be an asset not available for rateable distribution, the reason given being that the money was not realized 'from the property of the judgment debtor "

C—Sew Bux v Shib Chunder (1886) 13 Cal 225, following case A—A obtained a decree for money against B B's property was attached in execution of the decree C then obtained a decree for money against B, and applied for attachment of B's said property, a warrant of attachment was issued, but the property was not actually attached B then filed his petition in insolvency, and a vesting order was made The Official Assignee then paid into Court the amount of A's decree, and the property was released from attachment C then applied for rateable distribution under s 295 of the amount paid into court Held that C was not entitled to rateable distribution Trevelyan, J, said " I do not think that in this case the money was realized out of the property of the judgment debtor I think that, by 'sale or otherwise' means by 'sale or other process of execution provided for in the Civil Procedure Code "

D—Prosonnomoys v Sreenauth (1894) 21 Cal 809—In this case, Sale, J, said that the rule deducible from cases A and C was that 'to constitute a realization within the meaning of section 295, it must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court or it must be a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code

E—Ishudhapriya v Yusuf (1905) 28 Mad 380, following cases A B, C and D—Moneys realized by a judgment debtor by a private sale of his property attached in execution of a decree against him and paid by him into Court under s 275 of the old Code [now O XXI, r 55 (a)] for payment of the amount due to the decree holder at whose instance the property was attached were held to be assets not available for rateable distribution, the reason given being that though there was a realization of assets, the realization was not in one of the modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code.

Note—The only distinction between cases B and E is that in case E the judgment debtor obtained the money by sale of the attached property, while in case B he obtained it without any sale.

It is submitted that the assets in cases A, B, C and E should under the present section be treated as assets available for rateable distribution. The test under the present section is—

- (1) whether the moneys of which rateable distribution is claimed are assets held by the Court, and
- (2) whether they have been realized or obtained in execution. The scope of the new section is wider than that of the old one (1). See below notes under case F.

Cases under the present section.

In the following cases which were all decided under the present section it was held that the moneys held by the Court were not assets available for rateable distribution within the meaning of the section—

F—Sorabji v Kala (1911) 36 Bom. 156, 12 I C 911—Money paid into Court by a judgment debtor under O XXI, r 55 (a) [Code of 1882, s 275] for payment of the amount due to the decree holder at whose instance the property was attached has been held not subject to rateable distribution under this section (This is the same as case B above). Sir Basil Scott, C J, said "In the reference to the costs of realization we have an indication that the legislature contemplated that the assets referred to should be assets held in the process of execution. If we were to hold that money paid into Court under Order XXI, Rule 55, was assets held by the Court within the meaning of section 73, we should be only nullifying the provisions of Rule 55, for there will be no inducement to any judgment debtor to procure a payment into Court of the amount claimed by his attaching creditor, if his money could at once be absorbed by rateable distribution amongst a number of other creditors." This assumes that the word 'realized' means realized by sale or other process of execution expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code as was held in cases A, C, D and E. It is submitted, with respect, that the words "sale or otherwise" which occurred in s 293 of the Code of 1882 having been omitted in the present section, the interpretation put upon those words in cases A, C, D and E can no longer govern cases arising under the present Code. All that is necessary under the present Code is that (1) there should be assets held by the Court, and (2) that such assets should have been realized or obtained in execution proceedings (see the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins cited in case A above). It cannot possibly be said that moneys paid into Court by a judgment-debtor under stress of execution under O 21, r 55 (a), are not assets obtained in execution proceedings. It is indeed difficult to see how this view of the section nullifies the provisions of O 21, r 55, for money paid into Court under r 55 may be held to be assets subject to rateable distribution, and yet full effect may be given to r 55. There is no reason why because a particular payment may operate to release the person (see case G) or property of a judgment debtor from attachment, that payment should be applied for the benefit exclusively of the decree holder at whose instance

(1) Haras Saha v Faidur Rahman (1913) 40 Cal 619 622 18 I C 839

the person or property of the judgment debtor was attached. Moreover, the object of O 21 r 55 is not to afford any inducement to a judgment debtor as supposed by the Court in Sorabji v Kala. All that O 21 r 55 says is that the circumstances mentioned in cl's (a) (b) and (c) of that rule shall have the effect indicated in the rule. As to the argument based on the costs of realization it cannot possibly be said that no costs were incurred in obtaining the moneys from the judgment debtor. The decision in Sorabji v Kala has been disapproved by the High Court of Madras (m). It has also been disapproved by Pratt J in a later Bombay case—Nathmal v Maniram (n). As to the first of the two grounds on which the decision in Sorabji v Kala was based namely that the money was not realized in process of execution Pratt J said that it followed the cases decided on the words 'sale or otherwise' which were held to mean sale or other process of execution expressly provided for in the Code but that it was too restrictive a construction under the amended section (o). As to the second ground namely, that to allow rateable distribution of money paid into Court under O 21 r 55 would be to nullify the provisions of r 55 the learned Judge said: 'I also venture to doubt the correctness of the second reason. Order XXI, rule 55 operates effectively where there is one decree holder. If there are a number of decree holders there is no scope for the rule for the judgment debtor has no motive for paying off one judgment creditor when the same property is liable to be re attached by the others. To allow one decree holder to be paid off in full when the property is insufficient to discharge other judgment debts might possibly be undue preference and defeat the object of the section which is equal distribution of all the moneys received in execution. Again why should a judgment creditor whose attachment has been removed under Order XXI r 55 be in a better position than a judgment creditor who has taken the trouble of bringing the property to sale. Lastly if the money paid under Order XXI rule 55 to remove an attachment is not available for rateable distribution then a fortiori money paid to stop a sale under Order XXI rule 69 would also not be so available. But even under the old section it was assumed by Sir Charles Sargent in Purshottamdas case [case A p 208] that money paid to stop a sale is available for rateable distribution. So that the interpretation put upon the section in Sorabji v Kala makes the new section more restrictive than the old one and this is not what the Legislature intended. The decision in Sorabji v Kala has also been dissented from by the Calcutta High Court in Voor Mahomed v Bilasiram (p). In that case Rankin J said: 'The money paid with whatever motive if paid to the Court is paid upon terms of the Code whatever they may be. These terms as I read section 73 have been laid down so that distinctions in the form in which execution has been had in the precise extent to which execution has been allowed to run in the exact source or genesis of the fund in Court are now no part of the definition of assets that are subject to distribution rateably. The object of the new Code in using larger language can only be to avoid anomaly. To introduce a distinction on the strength of the voluntariness of the payment or the purpose of the debtor is I think to cut down the language and intention of the Code upon a principle which is inapplicable to the subject matter and which if applicable is very difficult to apply" The same view has been taken in later decisions of the same Court (g) In a recent Bombay case not yet reported Mirza, J, refused to follow the opinion of Scott, C J, in Soraby v Kala on the ground that it was obiter

In the Madras case above referred to (r), it was held that moneys paid into Court under O 21, r 83 (2), were assets liable to be distributed rateably within the meaning of this section In the course of the judgment, however, the learned judges went to the length of observing that the assets referred to in the present section need not be assets obtained in execution proceedings This indeed is an extreme view and it was dissented from by Pratt, J, the learned judge holding that the reference to the costs of realization and the position of the section in the Code at the end of Part II on Execution led irresistibly to the conclusion that the assets to be available for rateable distribution must have been obtained in execution (s) The view taken by Pratt, J, is, it is submitted, correct In a recent Calcutta case Rankin, J, took much the same view as Pratt, J (t) The learned Judge said "If for example a defendant is made to pay into Court the amount of the plaintiff's claim as a condition of getting an adjournment, it does not follow from my reading of section 73 that other creditors could claim to share Nor could they under O 21, r 52, where funds in Court are themselves the subject matter of the execution."

G—Ebbs v Umersey v W & A Graham & Co (1917) 19 Bom L R 274, 30 I C 623—Money paid by a judgment debtor under arrest under section 55, proviso 4, to the officer arresting him in order to secure his release is not an asset subject to rateable distribution [This case is the same as case A Macleod, J, said "It appears that the section was only intended to apply to assets realized by the sale of property attached" This view of the section, it is submitted, is not correct If this view were correct, money paid to stop a sale under O 21, r 69, and money raised by private alienation under O 21, r 83, would not be assets subject to rateable distribution But even under the old section it was assumed by Sir Charles Sargent in case A that such moneys were available for rateable distribution It cannot possibly be said that the present section is more restricted in its scope than the old section See also the observations of Rankin, J, in Noor Mahomed's case cited in case T above

H—Nathmal v Maniram (1919) 21 Bom L R 975, 53 I C 599—A obtained a decree for money against B and in execution of the decree took out a warrant for attachment of the moveable property of B under O 21, r 43 The bailiff entered B's shop and showed the warrant to B and pointed out that if the money were not paid he would seize and keep in his custody the moveable property in his shop B then paid the decretal amount and costs of execution and sheriff's poundage Upon these facts Pratt, J, expressed the opinion that the money having been paid under stress of the warrant (u), and the warrant being a process of execution, the money was an asset available for rateable distribution within the meaning of the present section. The learned Judge, however, felt bound by the decision of the Appellate Court in Sorabji v Kala [case F], and held that the money was not subject to rateable distribution.

I—Ghisulal v. Todarmull (1921) 26 C W. N 169, 70 I C 539.—In a money suit by A against B, B's property was attached before judgment, and then released on C standing security for the amount of the claim. The suit was ultimately decreed, and A applied for execution, whereupon C deposited the amount of the decree in Court. On that very day just before the deposit was made D, another decree holder, applied for execution of his decree. It was held that the moneys deposited by the surety were assets held by the Court within the meaning of this section, and D was entitled to rateable distribution.

4 Decrees for the payment of money.—It is only holders of decrees for the payment of money that are entitled to a rateable distribution under this section. What is a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of this section? We proceed to note the decisions—

(i) A decree for the payment of mesne profits is a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of this section, notwithstanding that the amount of mesne profits has not yet been ascertained. The holder of such a decree, who has applied for attachment under O 21, r 42 [Code of 1882, s 255], is entitled to a rateable distribution with other decree holders under this section (v).

(ii) A decree upon a mortgage, which enables the mortgagee to realize the amount of the mortgage debt "from the mortgaged properties and from the defendants personally" was held to be a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of the old section by the High Court of Calcutta in Hart v Tara Prasanna Mulherji (w). In that case the Court said "Every decree, by virtue of which money is payable to that extent a 'decree for money' within the meaning of the section, even though other relief may be granted by the decree [e.g., sale of mortgaged property], and the holder of such a decree is entitled to claim rateable distribution with holders of decrees for money simpliciter" (x). Following these observations, the High Court of Madras held that "where a decree upon a mortgage directs the mortgagor to pay the mortgage debt to the mortgagee within a period fixed by the Court, and provides that in default the mortgaged property should be sold, and the balance, if any, should be recovered from the mortgagor, the decree was one "for the payment of money" within the meaning of the old section (y). In subsequent cases, however, which turned upon the meaning of the expression "decree for the

43 (a case
now O 21,

payment of money" which occurred in s 230 of the Code of 1882 [now s 48], the High Court of Calcutta dissented from the Madras decision, on the ground that the decree in that case was not similar to the decree in Hart v Tara Prasanna Mulheri, the decree in the latter case containing a distinct order upon the mortgagor personally to pay the amount of the mortgage debt (2). The decree in those cases was similar to the decree in the Madras case, and it was held that the decree was not a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of s 230 of the Code of 1882. The decision, it seems, would have been the same if the Court had been called upon to interpret the same expression in s 295 of the Code of 1882, and the observations in Hart's case set out above would have been regarded as mere obiter dicta. The Allahabad decisions, bearing on the expression "decree for the payment of money" in s 230 of the Code of 1882, are also to the same effect (a). There is little doubt that if these High Courts were called upon to decide whether a decree of the character in the Madras case was a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of this section, they would hold that it was not. In any event the Madras decision cannot be sustained under this Code see O 21, r 20.

- (iii) A decree directing the payment under s 90 of the Transfer of Property Act [now O 34, r 6] of the balance of the mortgage debt remaining due after payment to the mortgagee of the nett proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property is a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of this section (b).
- (iv) A decree directing the payment of money by a person does not cease to be a decree for the payment of money so far as that person is concerned, merely because it directs, as against another person, the realization of the money claim from mortgaged property. Thus a decree against A, B and C, which, so far as A and B are concerned, is a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage by sale of their property, but which does not direct the sale of any specific property belonging to C, is as regards C, a decree for the payment of money (c).
- (v) A judgment entered up under s 86 of the Insolvent Debtors Act is a money decree (d).

5 Same judgment-debtor.—The provisions of this section do not apply unless the judgment debtor is the same. Where the holder of a decree against two or more persons applies for a rateable distribution of the assets realized from property belonging to one of such persons, the application is one for the execution of the decree against the same judgment-debtor.

Similarly, where the holder of a decree against one person applies for a rateable distribution of the assets of that person realised from property belonging to that person and another, such application is an application for the execution of a decree against the same judgment debtor

Y obtains a decree against A, B and C, and attaches in execution of the decree certain property belonging to A, B and C jointly. Y holds a decree against A alone. Y is entitled under the provisions of this section to a proportionate distribution of the assets realised by the sale of the joint property, so far as they represent the share of A in that property. Similarly, if Y held a decree against A and B he would be entitled to a rateable distribution of the assets so far as they represented the share of A and B in the property. Gonesh v Shira (1903) 30 Cal 583, Gatti Lal v Bir Bahadur (1903) 27 All 158, Ramanathan v Subramania (1903) 26 Mad 179, Chhotalal v Nabibhai (1905) 7 Bom L R 567. These were decisions under s 293 of the Code of 1852. Quære whether these decisions have been affected by the introduction in the present section of the word "passed" which did not find a place in the Code of 1882. Balmer Laurie & Co v Jadunath (1915) 42 Cal 1, 27 I C 644.

Decree against legal representative of judgment debtor—It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay and Madras that if a decree is obtained by X against B, and by Y after B's death against B's legal representative, the judgment debtor is not the same and the present section does not apply (e). A different opinion has been expressed by the High Court of Calcutta (f).

Clauses (a) (b) and (c)—The first paragraph of this section and clauses (a) and (b) have reference to sales in execution of simple money decrees. Clause (a) declares the incompetence of a mortgagee or incumbrancer as such to share in any surplus proceeds when property is sold subject to his mortgage or charge. But the alternative is afforded to him by clause (b) of consenting to the property being sold free of his mortgage or charge in which case the Court may give him the same right against the sale proceeds as he had against the property. Clause (c) has reference to a sale in execution enforcing an incumbrance, but in distributing the sale proceeds the discharge of subsequent (and not prior) incumbrances is alone taken into account (g). In cases coming under clause (c) the application for execution must be made prior to the sale of the property (h). Compare O 34 r 13.

Claims for rateable distribution of assets—These claims are claims enforceable under an attachment within the meaning of s 64. See notes to s 64, "Explanation to the section," on p 185 above.

Attachment before judgment—A decree holder who has caused property to be attached before judgment is not entitled to share in a rateable distribution of the sale proceeds of that property, unless he makes, after judgment, a fresh application for execution under O 21, r 11 [Code of 1882, s 235]. O 38, r 11 [Code of 1882, s 490] does not touch the point (i).

time to be the rights of parties without this distribution importing a conclusive adjudication as to those rights, which may be subsequently re-adjusted in a suit brought under the penultimate paragraph of the section (j) Such a suit is virtually a suit for money had and received, and the period of limitation is three years from the date of the receipt of the assets by the defendant (k) The suit being one for money had and received, it would be premature if it were brought before the moneys were actually paid to the defendant A mere order for the payment of money under this section is not sufficient to found the action (l)

Suit by subsequent mortgagee to recover balance of money realised by sale under a prior mortgage—X mortgages his property to A He then mortgages the same property to B Subsequently he executes a further charge on the property in favour of A A sues X on the first mortgage, joining B as a defendant, and obtains a decree on the mortgage The property is sold in execution of the decree, and a balance of Rs. 12,000 which remains after satisfying A's decree is deposited in Court A then obtains a decree for sale on the further charge, and in execution of the decree draws out the balance deposited in Court B is not joined as a party to this suit, nor is any notice given to him that A was drawing out of Court the balance of Rs. 12,000 B then sues A to recover the amount drawn out by A, that is Rs. 12,000 Such a suit is not one under sub sec (2), and the period of limitation applicable to the suit is 12 years under art 132 of the Limitation Act The suit is really one to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property within the meaning of that article (m)

Declaratory suit—Is a decree holder claiming under this section entitled to file a suit for a declaration that another decree holder is not entitled to rateable distribution and for an injunction restraining him from receiving payment, before distribution of the assets by the Court, or is he bound to wait until actual distribution is made and then sue for a refund? In a Madras case (n), Sadasiva Ayyar, J, expressed the opinion that he is entitled to sue for a declaration

Inquiry as to the validity of decree.—There is a conflict of opinion whether where it is alleged by a claimant that a decree obtained by another claimant is collusive that is, obtained by the latter in collusion with the judgment debtor, the Court has power to inquire into the validity of the decree The High Court of Calcutta (o) has held that it has On the other hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Madras (p) and Bombay (q), that it has not The latter view, it is submitted, is correct. If a Court executing a decree has no power to go behind the decree [see notes to s. 38], much less has a Court acting under the provisions of this section (r)

Rights of Government not affected.—A judgment debt due to the Crown is entitled to precedence in execution (s)

Rights created by this section not affected by insolvency.—An order made under this section for rateable distribution is not affected by the insolvency of the judgment-debtor subsequent to the making of the order. But the order will be confined in its operation to the assets of the judgment debtor realized up to the date of the vesting order, assets realized after the date of the vesting order will vest in the Official Assignee (1)

Appeal—An order made under this section is not appealable unless all the conditions enumerated in s 47 are present (u) One of those conditions is that the question decided by the Court should be one which arose between the parties to the suit, that is, between the judgment debtor on the one hand and the decree holder on the other (1) Hence an order made under this section determining a question between two rival decree holders, in which the judgment debtor had no interest does not fall within s 47 and no second appeal lies from such order (u) But if the question determined by the order arose not only between rival decree holders, but also between the judgment-debtor on the one hand and the decree holders on the other, the order would be within s. 47, and would therefore be appealable (x)

Revision.—As to revision see the undermentioned cases (y)

RESISTANCE TO EXECUTION.

74. [S. 330.] Where the Court is satisfied that the holder of a decree for the possession of immovable property or that the purchaser of immovable property sold in execution of a decree has been resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession of the property by the judgment-debtor or some person on his behalf and that such resistance or obstruction was without any just cause, the Court may, at the instance of the decree-holder or purchaser, order the judgment-debtor or such other person to be detained in the civil prison for a term which may extend to thirty days and may further direct that the decree-holder or purchaser be put into possession of the property.

PART III.

Incidental Proceedings

COMMISSIONS

75. [New] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Court may issue a commission—

Power of Court to issue commissions

- (a) to examine any person,
- (b) to make a local investigation,
- (c) to examine or adjust accounts, or
- (d) to make a partition

The general powers of Courts in regard to commissions have been summarised in this section. The detailed provisions are set forth in O 26

76. [S 385] (1) A commission for the examination of any person may be issued to any Court (not being a High Court) situate in a province other than the province in which the Court of issue is situate and having jurisdiction in the place in which the person to be examined resides

Commission to assize Court

(2) Every Court receiving a commission for the examination of any person under subsection (1) shall examine him or cause him to be examined pursuant thereto, and the commission, when it has been duly executed, shall be returned together with the evidence taken under it to the Court from which it was issued, unless the order for issuing the commission has otherwise directed, in which case the commission shall be returned in terms of such order

See O 26 r 4

77. [New] In lieu of issuing a commission the Court may issue a letter of request to examine a witness residing at any place not within British India

Letter of request

78. [S. 391.] The provisions as to the execution and return of commissions for the examination of witnesses shall apply to commissions issued by—

(a) Courts situate beyond the limits of British India and established or continued by the authority of His Majesty or of the Governor General in Council, or

|| (b) Courts situate in any part of the British Empire other than British India, or

(c) Courts of any foreign country for the time being in alliance with His Majesty

PART IV.

Suits in Particular Cases.

SUITS BY OR AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT OR PUBLIC OFFICERS IN THEIR OFFICIAL CAPACITY.

79. [S. 416.] (1) Suits by or against the Government shall be instituted by or against the Secretary of State for India in Council.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any information exhibited by the Advocate General in exercise of the power declared by Section 111 of the East India Company Act, 1813.

Sub-sec (2) is new

As to procedure in suits by or against Government, see O 27

Scope of the section—This section does not enlarge or in any way affect the extent of the claims or liabilities enforceable by or against the Secretary of State for India in Council which must always depend on the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1858, s. 65 [now Government of India Act, 1915, s. 32]. It gives no cause of action, but only declares the mode of procedure when a cause of action has arisen (1) It is enacted by that section that "the Secretary of State in Council shall and may sue and be sued as well in India as in England by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a body corporate, and all persons and bodies politic shall and may have and take the same suits remedies and proceedings, legal and equitable, against the Secretary of State in Council of India as they could have done against the said Company," that is, the East India Company (a)

The Secretary of State is not a proper party to a suit by an owner of land under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act 1 of 1877 against a member of the public who claims to use such land as a public road and thereby endangers the title of the owner (b)

Act of State—The Secretary of State can only be sued in respect of those matters for which the East India Company could have been sued, i.e., matters for which private individuals or trading corporations could have been sued, or in regard to those matters for which there is express statutory provision. No suit would lie against the East India Company in respect of acts of State or acts of Sovereignty, and therefore no suit in respect of such acts lies against the Secretary of State in Council (c)

Jurisdiction—A suit against the Secretary of State for India can only be brought in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose. The words "dwell, or "reside or "carry on business" or "personally work for gain," which occur in s 16 19 and 20 of the Code and cl 12 of the Letters Patent do not apply to the Secretary of State in Council (d)

Information exhibited by Advocate General.—The power of the Advocate General to exhibit informations in the nature of actions at law or bills in equity was expressly declared by s 111 of the East India Company Act, 1813 [53 Geo 3 c 155] and kept alive by s 3 of the Government of India Act, 1833 [3 & 4 Will 4 c 83] and again by s 1 of the Government of India Act, 1853 [16 & 17 Vict, c 95] and by s 29 of the Government of India Act, 1858 [21 & 22 Vict c 106] now merged in s 114 of the Government of India Act, 1915 [5 and 6 Geo 5 c 61]. As the Governor General in Council was precluded by s 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861 [24 & 25 Vict, c 67] from legislative interference with the provisions of any of the enactments above quoted it was thought that s 416 of the Code of 1882 [now sub section (1) of the present section] in so far as it excluded informations exhibited by the Advocate General did not comprehend a full and accurate statement of the law on the subject. Accordingly sub section (2) was added into the present section, so that the existence of the Statute therein referred to may not be overlooked. As to the definition of information see Wharton's Law Lexicon, p 437

80. [S 424] No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, or against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been, in the case of the Secretary of State in Council, delivered to, or left at the office of, a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the district, and, in the case of a public officer, delivered to him or left at his office, stating the cause of action, the name description and place of residence of the plaintiff and the relief which he claims, and the plaint shall contain a statement that such notice has been so delivered or left

Changes in the section—This section corresponds with s 424 of the Code of 1882. The words any act have been substituted for the words, an act, and the words by such public officer for the words by him. See notes. Notice to Secretary of State, on p 222 below

Provisions of this section imperative—The language of this section is imperative and absolutely debars a Court from entertaining a suit instituted without compliance with its provisions. If the provisions of the section are not complied with the only course open to the Court is to reject the plaint under O 7 r 11, cl (d) [Code of 1882 s 54 (c)] ()

Object of notice.—The object of the notice required by this section is to give the Secretary of State or the public officer an opportunity to reconsider his legal position and to make amends or settle the claim, if so advised, without litigation (f)

Sufficiency of notice—A notice under this section is sufficient, if it substantially fulfils its object in informing the parties concerned generally of the nature of the suit intended to be filed (g). Hence a notice is not invalid merely because it is given by only two out of three plaintiffs (h). It is essential, however, that the notice should state the names, descriptions, and places of residence of all the plaintiffs. Hence where a suit was brought by sixty three plaintiffs, but the notice contained the names, descriptions and places of residence of only two of them, it was held that the notice was insufficient (i).

Waiver of notice—It is competent to the Secretary of State to waive the notice, and he may be estopped by his conduct from pleading the want of notice at a late stage of the trial. Thus where objection was taken by the Secretary of State to the sufficiency of notice in his written statement, but there was no issue raised upon the point, nor was any objection taken by him at any stage of the trial in the Court of first instance, and it was another defendant who applied just before the trial began that an additional issue might be raised on that point, it was held that so far as the Secretary of State was concerned the notice was waived, and that it was not competent to the other defendant to raise the question (j).

Notice to Secretary of State.—Where a suit is proposed to be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, notice to him under this section should be given in all cases, whether the act in respect of which the suit is to be brought purports to be done by him in his official capacity or not. The substitution of the words, "by such public officer," for the words, "by him," which occurred in the corresponding s 424 of the Code of 1882 makes the point quite clear. The words of this section countenance no distinction based only on the class or character of the suit filed when it is filed against the Secretary of State (k). See notes, "Notice in suits for injunction," on p 223 below.

Public officer—See sec 2 (17) above.

"Any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity"—These words were introduced into s 424 of the Code of 1877 by Act 12 of 1879. The same words also occurred in s 424 of the Code of 1882. The present section corresponds with s 424 of the Code of 1882 except that the word "any" has been substituted for the word "an," and the words "such public officer" have been substituted for the word "him." According to the concise Oxford Dictionary, to "purport" in this context means to "be intended to seem." Applying this meaning, the words "any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" mean any act intended to seem to be done by him in his official capacity (l). If the act was one such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his official duties, and he considered himself to be acting as a public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting, the act clearly "purports to be done in his official capacity" within the ordinary meaning of the term "purport" (m) See notes below, "Notice to public officer," and "Notice in suits for injunction"

Notice to public officer.—There is no doubt that notice must be given to the Secretary of State in all cases whatever be the character of the suit (n), but as regards notice to a public officer it is to be given to him in those cases only where the suit is "in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" The decisions bearing on the words, "in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity," may be divided into the following four groups —

I Since notice to a public officer is required to be given only in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, no notice is necessary where the act done by him is not within his sphere of duties Thus where a public officer took possession of property which he had no authority to seize and was sued for trespass, it was held that the suit was not against him in his official capacity, but as a private individual, and therefore no notice was necessary (o) Similarly where the suit was one for damages for assault, the allegation being that the plaintiff, a sub overseer, was assaulted by the defendant who was his superior officer in a fit of anger, it was held that the act complained of was not an act purporting to be done by the defendant in his official capacity, and therefore no notice was necessary (p) Likewise where a suit was brought to recover money due on a promissory note from a minor under the Court of Wards, and the Collector was appointed guardian ad litem of the minor, it was held that no notice was necessary as the Collector was on the record merely for the protection of the minor's interests (q)

II Since notice to a public officer is necessary only in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, it follows that the only class of suits in which it is necessary to give notice to a public officer is where the suit is founded upon tort, in other words, where the suit is in respect of a wrong committed by him in the discharge of his official duties, and that no notice is necessary if the suit is founded upon contract (r), or any other cause of action (s)

Illustrations

(1) Suit founded upon contract—A sues B, a public officer, to recover the price of certain timber supplied by him to B No notice is necessary, for the suit is not in respect of any tort or wrong done by B, but is one for damages for breach of a contract Rajmal v Hanmant (1896) 20 Bom 697

(2) Suit founded upon a contract implied in law—A suit against a public officer or the recovery of money paid to him under protest is one sounding substantially in tort, though in form it is one for money had and received Notice, therefore, of such a suit must be given before the suit is instituted Cecil Gray v The Cantonment Committee of Poona (1910) 34 Bom 583, 7 I C 679 See Indian Contract Act, s 72 ill (b)

(3) Suit founded upon other causes of action—No notice is necessary in a suit against the Official Trustee to determine the rights of beneficiaries to trust funds in his hands. The reason is that such a suit is not in respect of any wrong or tort committed by the Official Trustee in the discharge of his official duties Shahbazadee v Fergusson (1881) 7 Cal 499 See notes Notice to Official Trustee, on p 226 below

A buys land from B. Subsequently B in collusion with C deprives A of possession of the land. B then becomes insolvent and his estate vests in the Official Assignee. Sometime afterwards A applies to the Revenue Authorities to have the land entered in his name in the Record of Rights. The Official Assignee objects, and A sues B, C, and the Official Assignee for a declaration of his right to possession of the land. No notice is necessary to the Official Assignee, for there is no tort committed by him. Objection on the part of the Official Assignee to the entry of the land in A's name in the Record of Rights is not such an "act" as is contemplated by this section. A real cause of action is dispossession by B and C. Damodar v. Govindji (1923) 27 Bom. L. R. 378, 73 I. C. 240, (23) A. II 392.

III. A suit may be one founded upon tort as stated in Rule II above, but the wrongful act complained of may have been done inadvertently or it may have been done mala fide, that is, maliciously or dishonestly. If the wrong is done inadvertently, there is no doubt that notice is necessary under this section. But there is a conflict of opinion whether notice is necessary under this section when a public officer acts mala fide, that is, maliciously or dishonestly, in the discharge of his duties, it being held in some cases that it is not (t), while in others that it is (u). The cases in which it is held that notice is not necessary proceed on the ground that an act done mala fide by a public officer cannot be said to be an 'act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity' within the meaning of this section. The cases in which it has been held that notice is necessary proceed on the ground that the section makes no distinction between acts done bona fide and acts done mala fide and that notice is necessary in every case of wrong purporting to be done by a public officer in his official capacity. Thus where a suit was brought against a police officer, the action complained of being that he searched the house of the plaintiff, dragged him to the thana, and detained and kept him in confinement for several hours maliciously and without cause, it was held that the officer having acted illegally and in bad faith could not be said to have acted in his capacity as a public officer and therefore no notice was necessary (t). Similarly, where a suit was brought against a District Magistrate and two officers of Police for conspiracy and malicious arrest and search it was held that the suit was one in which the public officer was sued in respect of an act done in bad faith and therefore no notice under this section was required (u). On the other hand, in Jogendranath Roy v. Price (x) where the plaintiff sued a District Magistrate for damages for illegal and malicious arrest under a warrant, it was held that though the act was said to be done maliciously, notice was required to be given under this section. The Court said, 'The section does not seem to us to warrant the drawing of a distinction between acts of this kind done inadvertently or otherwise. Following the above decision it was held by the High Court of Allahabad in a suit against a Police Officer to recover certain books seized by him in a search, the seizure of which was denied, that notice was necessary under this section (y). In a case decided by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (z), A sued B and attached before judgment certain wood belonging to B. Thereafter the village munsif sold the wood for arrears of revenue due from B though there was no necessity to sell the whole, and after retaining the amount due for arrears of revenue handed over the balance of the sale proceeds to B, although he had knowledge of the attachment. Thereupon A brought a suit against the village munsif for damages, alleging that the munsif had colluded with B and paid the balance to him. The Court found that the munsif was aware of the attachment and that he dishonestly and fraudulently paid over the balance of the sale proceeds to B. On the question of notice under this section, the Full Bench held that the munsif was entitled to notice under this section, although he acted mala fide in the discharge of his duties. The latest decisions of all the High Courts are in favour of the view that notice is necessary even if the act is done mala fide.

IV Where the suit is one founded upon tort, notice must be given whether the relief sought is for damages or merely for a declaration that the act complained of is against the provisions of law and therefore illegal (a)

Notice in suits for injunction.—Where a suit is brought against a public officer for an injunction to restrain him from doing an act threatened to be done by him, no notice is necessary to be given under this section. The reason is that this section applies where a relief is sought in respect of an act done by a public officer, and not where relief is sought in respect of an act not yet done, but threatened to be done (b). It must, however, be noted that the words "act purporting to be done" relate to a public officer and not to the Secretary of State. Therefore, notice must be given to the Secretary of State, even though the suit against him may be one for an injunction (c), unless the circumstances of the case are such that if notice has to be given and the plaintiff has to wait for two months, irreparable injury may be done to him in the mean time (d). Following this view, it has been held that where in a case of dispute between the plaintiff and Government as to the title of certain lands the plaintiff gave notice to the Secretary of State of an intended suit for a declaration of title as required by this section, but during the currency of the notice Government threatened to demolish the structure on the land, the plaintiff was entitled to institute a suit even before the expiry of two months from the date of the notice for a declaration of title and for an injunction restraining Government from demolishing the structure. The Court said: "It is small gain to a private person to enact that he may have redress against a defendant after two months' notice if, during the currency of the two months, the defendant is allowed to make redress impossible. The right of suit, which is expressly granted by the Legislature, cannot, in reason, be deferred until its exercise has become illusory" (e). Where the primary relief claimed against a public officer is an injunction restraining him from selling the plaintiff's property, the fact that the plaintiff also seeks an award in the alternative of compensation equal to the value of the property does not render a notice necessary under this section (f).

Death of complainant after notice but before suit.—Notice is given by A under this section to the Secretary of State of a proposed suit. A dies before the institution of the suit. The notice by A does not enure for the benefit of his legal representative, and he must give a fresh notice under this section before instituting the suit (g).

Amendment of plaint—Where notice of a proposed suit is once given, it is no necessary to give a fresh notice of two months if the plaint has to be amended owing to discovery of facts not within the plaintiff's knowledge at the time of the institution of the suit (k). But no amendment will be allowed if the effect of the amendment is to convert the suit into another of a different character, e.g., a suit based on negligence into one based on nuisance. In such a case a fresh suit must be brought after giving fresh notice as required by this section (i).

Notice to Collector—A collector is entitled to notice under this section in a suit for damages in respect of an act done by him in his official capacity as agent of the Court of Wards, but he is not entitled to such notice if he is sued or joined as a party, not by reason of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, but merely for the protection of a minor's title (j).

Notice to Cantonment Committee.—A Cantonment Committee constituted under the Indian Cantonments Act, 1889, is a "public officer" within the meaning of this section (l).

Notice to Official Assignee—The Official Assignee is a public officer and he is entitled to notice under this section before a suit is filed against him in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity (l). The same rule applies to a Receiver appointed under the Provincial Insolvency Act 6 of 1920 (m). But no notice is necessary to such officer in a suit to restrain him by an injunction from selling goods claimed by the plaintiff to belong to him (n). See notes, 'Notice in suits for injunction,' on p. 225 above. See also ill (3) on p. 223 above.

Notice to Official Trustee.—By s. 16 of the Official Trustees Act 2 of 1913 it is enacted that nothing in s. 80 of the Code shall apply to any suit against the Official Trustee in which no relief is claimed against him personally.

Notice to Administrator-General—By s. 41 of the Administrator General's Act 3 of 1913 it is enacted that nothing in s. 80 of the Code shall apply to any suit against the Administrator General in which no relief is claimed against him personally.

Notice to common manager appointed under sec 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885—Such a manager is a public officer within the meaning of this section, and he is entitled to notice under this section (o).

Limitation—In computing the period of limitation prescribed for a suit under this section, the period of the notice should be excluded (p).

Place of suing—See notes to s. 79, 'Jurisdiction,' on p. 221 above.

(2) Execution shall not be issued on any such decree unless it remains unsatisfied for the period of three months computed from the date of such report.

SUITS BY ALIENS AND BY OR AGAINST FOREIGN AND NATIVE RULERS

83. [S 430] (1) Alien enemies residing in British India with the permission of the Governor-General in Council, and alien friends, may sue in the Courts of British India, as if they were subjects of His Majesty

(2) No alien enemy residing in British India without such permission, or residing in a foreign country, shall sue in any of such Courts

Explanation—Every person residing in a foreign country the Government of which is at war with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and carrying on business in that country without a license in that behalf under the hand of one of His Majesty's Secretaries of State or of a Secretary to the Government of India, shall, for the purpose of subsection (2), be deemed to be an alien enemy residing in a foreign country.

At the time of filing the petition, A was residing in Lucknow apparently with the permission of the Government of India, while her husband was in Germany. After filing the petition, A applied for an order directing the summons together with a copy of the petition to be sent to the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court in England for transmission to the Foreign Office for service upon the respondent. The Court granted the application (r).

Limitation—Where the right of alien enemies to sue is suspended by an order of the Government, the period during which the right is suspended is not to be excluded from the time prescribed by the Limitation Act for the suit (s).

84. [S. 431] (1) A foreign State may sue in any Court of British India :

When foreign States may sue

Provided that such State has been recognised by His Majesty or by the Governor-General in Council :

Provided, also, that the object of the suit is to enforce a private right vested in the head of such State or in any officer of such State in his public capacity.

(2) Every Court shall take judicial notice of the fact that a foreign State has or has not been recognized by His Majesty or by the Governor-General in Council.

Sub-section (1), proviso (2)—The second proviso to the corresponding s. 431, C. P. C., 1882, ran as follows —

"Provided that the object of the suit is to enforce the private rights of the head or of the subjects of the foreign State"

The language of that proviso was liable to be construed as conferring upon the head of a foreign State a general power to litigate in respect of the private rights of his subjects. Such, however, was not the object, and the language has accordingly been modified to make it clear that the object of litigation by a foreign State must be the enforcement of a private right vested in the head of the State or in an officer of the State as such.

Private right vested in the head of a State.—That is, those private rights of a State that must be enforced through a Court of Justice as distinguished from its political rights (t).

Foreign State as plaintiff—A suit by a foreign State must be brought in the name by which it has been recognized by His Majesty (u).

85. [S. 432] (1) Persons specially appointed by order of the Government at the request of any Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief, whether in subordinate alliance with the British Government or otherwise, and whether residing within or without British of the Government, to act on behalf of such Prince or Chief, to prosecute or defend any suit on his behalf, shall be deemed to be the recognised agents by whom appearances, acts and applications under this Code may be made or done on behalf of such Prince or Chief.

(2) An appointment under this section may be made for the purpose of a specified suit or of several specified suits, or for the purpose of all such suits as it may from time to time be necessary to prosecute or defend on behalf of the Prince or Chief.

(3) A person appointed under this section may authorize or appoint persons to make appearances and applications and do acts in any such suit or suits as if he were himself a party thereto.

Recognized agents specially appointed under this section.—This section is an enabling section. It enables a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief to prosecute or defend suits through recognized agents specially appointed in that behalf, it does not prevent the institution of a suit by a Sovereign Prince in his own name or through a recognized agent appointed under O. 3, r 2 [Code of 1882, s 37] (v)

A plaint in a suit instituted on behalf of a Ruling Chief is signed by A B. At the time of signing the plaint A B was not specially appointed to sue on behalf of the Chief under this section. The plaint is nevertheless good, if A B is subsequently appointed to sue on behalf of the Chief, and if the appointment is made before the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the suit (w)

A Political Agent not specially appointed under this section cannot sue on behalf of a Prince (x)

Discovery.—A foreign State is not exempt from giving discovery (y)

86. [S 433] (1) Any such Prince or Chief, and any ambassador or envoy of a foreign State, may, with the consent of the Governor-General in Council, certified by the signature of a Secretary to the Government of India, but not without such consent, be sued in any competent Court.

(2) Such consent may be given with respect to a specified suit or to several specified suits, or with respect to all suits of any specified class or classes, and may specify, in the case of any suit or class of suits, the Court in which the Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy may be sued; but it shall not

(a) has instituted a suit in the Court against the person desiring to sue him, or

(b) by himself or another trades within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(c) is in possession of immoveable property situate within those limits and is to be sued with reference to such property or for money charged thereon.

(3) No such Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy shall be arrested under this Code, and, except with the consent of the Governor General in Council certified as aforesaid, no decree shall be executed against the property of any such Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy

(4) The Governor General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, authorize a Local Government and any Secretary to that Government to exercise, with respect to any Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy named in the notification, the functions assigned by the foregoing subsections to the Governor General in Council and a Secretary to the Government of India, respectively

(5) A person may, as a tenant of immoveable property sue, without such consent as is mentioned in this section, a Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy from whom he holds or claims to hold the property

Consent shall not be given unless it appears to the Government that—The words it appears to the Government that have been added in subsection (2) to make it clear that the decision of the Government is final and not open to question by the Court. The contrary was assumed in the undermentioned cases (2)

Consent must be obtained before institution of suit.—This section provides that a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief may be sued in any competent Court with the consent of the Governor General in Council. Such consent must be obtained before the institution of the suit. Consent given after the institution of the suit is not a sufficient consent under this section. If the consent is not obtained before the institution of the suit the proper course is to dismiss the suit or perhaps allow the plaintiff to withdraw it with liberty to bring a fresh suit under O 23 r 1 [Code of 1882 s 313] (a)

Waiver of objection to want of consent—It has been seen in the notes to s 21 that where a Court has no jurisdiction at all to entertain a suit the objection to its jurisdiction may be taken at any stage of the suit even though the defendant may have waived the objection the reason is that a defect in the jurisdiction cannot be cured by waiver. But if the case is one of irregular exercise of jurisdiction the defect may be cured by waiver on the part of the defendant. If a suit is instituted against a Sovereign Prince without the consent of the Governor General in Council, and the plaint is admitted, the case is one of irregular exercise of jurisdiction, and if the defendant does not object to the institution of the suit until the suit is ripe for hearing, he will be deemed to have waived the objection to jurisdiction. It was so held by the High Court of Bombay after an exhaustive review of the authorities on the subject (b). This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Madras on the ground that "the recognition of cases of waiver, as excepted from the ordinary provisions of International Law as understood in England, cannot be imported into the clear language of the Indian Code" (c). The Patna High Court has gone to the length of holding that applications for adjournment made on behalf of a Ruling Chief amount to a waiver of his privilege and disentitle him from objecting to the jurisdiction of the Court (d). The fact that a Sovereign Prince chooses to waive his privilege in one suit does not preclude him from pleading it in another suit (e).

Suit against person who subsequently becomes a Ruling Chief—Where a person attains the rank of a Ruling Chief after the institution of a suit against him, the suit cannot be continued against him without the consent of the Governor General in Council (f).

Immoveable property—Where a Ruling Chief and a private individual are co sharers in the profits of land within British India, a suit by the latter against the Ruling Chief for his share of the profits under s. 165 of the Agra Tenancy Act [UP Act 2 of 1901] cannot be instituted in a Court of British India without the consent of the Governor General in Council (g).

Money charged on immoveable property—Unless maintenance has been made a charge upon immoveable property, a mere claim for maintenance is not a claim for money charged on immoveable property within the meaning of sub section (2) cl (c) (h).

Suit against Ruling Chief in his private capacity—The provisions of this section apply whether the suit is brought against a Ruling Chief in his Sovereign capacity or in his private capacity such as a trustee of a temple in British India (i).

Sovereign Prince—The Maharaja of Hill Tipperah is a Sovereign Prince within the meaning of this section in that the Tipperah State governs itself without dependence on any foreign power. 'It makes and administers its own laws and the Maharaja admittedly exercise the power of life and limb within his own territory.' Its acknowledgment of the British Government as the paramount power, and the nazar paid on the recognition by that Government of succeeding Maharajahs, do not take away from it the status of a Sovereign State (j).

Ruling Chief—The Dewan of Patodi is a Ruling Chief within the meaning of this section (k). The burmudaw Jagadgurus are also Ruling Chiefs (l). The Maharaja of Benares is also a Ruling Chief (m).

Style of Princes and Chiefs as parties to suits

87. [S 434] A Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief may sue, and shall be sued, in the name of his State

Provided that in giving the consent referred to in the foregoing section the Governor General in Council or the Local Government, as the case may be, may direct that any such Prince or Chief shall be sued in the name of an agent or in any other name

INTERPLEADER

88. [S 470, R S C, O 57, rr 12] Where two or more persons claim adversely to one another the same debt, sum of money or other property, moveable or immoveable, from another person, who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs and who is ready to pay or deliver it to the rightful claimant, such other person may institute a suit of interpleader against all the claimants for the purpose of obtaining a decision as to the person to whom the payment or delivery shall be made and of obtaining indemnity for himself

Provided that where any suit is pending in which the rights of all parties can properly be decided, no such suit of interpleader shall be instituted

See O 35 below

Changes in the section—This section corresponds with s 10 of the Code of 1880 except in the following particulars—

- (1) The words "the same debt, sum of money or other property, moveable or immoveable" have been substituted for the words "the same payment or property"
- (2) The words "who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs" have been borrowed from R S C O 57 r 12 and have been substituted for the words "whose only interest therein is that of a mere stakeholder"

What is an interpleader suit—An interpleader suit is one in which the real dispute is between the defendants only and the defendant interpleads that is to say pleads against each other instead of pleading against the plaintiff as in an ordinary suit. In every interpleader suit there must be some debt or sum of money or other property in dispute between the defendants only and the plaintiff must be a person who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs and who is ready to pay or deliver it to such of the defendants as may be declared by the Court to be entitled to it. Thus suppose certain property is claimed by A as well as by B and A is in possession of that property and claims no interest in the property himself and is ready and willing to deliver it to such party as may be declared by the Court to be the rightful owner of it, X as plaintiff may institute an interpleader suit against A and B as defendants. In such a case X will, as a rule, be dismissed from the suit at the first hearing after his costs are provided for, and A and B will be left to interplead and to fight the matter out between themselves as if one of them was plaintiff and the other was defendant (O 35, r 4). But before the plaintiff is dismissed from the suit, he must deposit the property in dispute in Court (O 35, r 2).

Who claims no interest other than for charges or costs—A railway company which claims no interest in goods in its possession other than a lien on the goods for wharfage, demurrage and freight, may institute an interpleader suit, where the goods are claimed by two persons adversely to each other (n).

A holds in his hands a sum of Rs 5000 which is claimed by B and C adversely to each other. A institutes an interpleader suit against B and C. It is found at the hearing that A had entered into an agreement with B before the institution of the suit that if B succeeded in the suit he should accept from A Rs 4,000 only in full satisfaction of his claim. Here A has by virtue of the agreement an interest in the subject matter of the suit and he is not therefore entitled to institute an interpleader suit. The suit must be dismissed (o).

A suit is not necessarily an interpleader suit and subject to the provisions of this section merely because one of the reliefs claimed by the plaintiff requires the defendants to interplead together concerning certain claims. The Court must have regard to all the prayers of the plaint to determine the exact nature of the suit (p).

PART V.

Special Proceedings.

ARBITRATION

89 [New.] (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the second Schedule

Arbitration

(2) The provisions of the second Schedule shall not affect any arbitration pending at the commencement of this Code, but shall apply to any arbitration after that date under any agreement or reference made before the commencement of this Code

Arbitration—The provisions of the Code of 1882 relating to arbitration have been transferred with certain modifications to a separate Schedule [Sch II] ' in the hope that at no distant date they may be transferred into a comprehensive Arbitration Act '

Indian Arbitration Act 9 of 1899—Application of the Act—The Act came into force on the first day of July 1899. It relates to arbitration by agreement without the intervention of a Court of Justice that is to say to private arbitrations only. Sec 3 of the Act provides that sections 593 to 520 of the Code of 1880 [now paras 17, 19 and 20 of Sch II] shall not apply to any submission or arbitration to which the Act applies. The question then arises to what cases does the Act apply? Sec 2 of the Act provides that the Act shall apply only in cases where if the subject matter submitted to arbitration were the subject of a suit the suit could whether with leave or otherwise, be instituted in a Presidency town. The terms of that section show that two conditions must be present before the provisions of the Arbitration Act can be instituted in a Presidency town. It is only to such cases that the Arbitration Act applies. In other cases the provisions of paras 17, 19 and 20 of Sch II apply.

Sec 2 of the Arbitration Act empowers the Local Government with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, to declare the Act applicable to local areas other than Presidency towns as if they were Presidency towns.

Suit on an award—As to the form of a suit on an award see Sch I App A form No 10. See also notes to Sch II para 20. This paragraph is no bar to a regular suit to enforce an award.

In this connection may be noted the provisions of s 30 of the Specific Relief Act of 1877, by which it is enacted that the provisions of Chapter II of the Act relating to the specific performance of contracts shall mutatis mutandis apply to awards. See Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract and Specific Relief Acts notes to s 30 of the latter Act.

SPECIAL CASE

90 [New] Where any persons agree in writing to state a case for the opinion of the Court, then the Court shall try and determine the same in the manner prescribed.

Power to state case for opinion of Court

See O 36 below

Re-opening of case—It is settled practice that where a special case is stated by consent it can only be re-opened by mutual consent (r)

SUITS RELATING TO PUBLIC MATTERS

91 [New] (1) In the case of a public nuisance the Advocate General, or two or more persons having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General, may institute a suit, though no special damage has been caused, for a declaration and injunction or for such other relief as may be appropriate to the circumstances of the case.

Public nuisances

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any right of suit which may exist independent of its provisions.

This section is new. It creates a right of action where there was none before.

Remedies for a public nuisance—Nuisances are of two kinds—(1) public and (2) private.

A public nuisance is an act or illegal omission which causes any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity or which must necessarily cause injury, obstruction, danger or annoyance to persons who may have occasion to use any public right [Indian Penal Code, s 268].

Where a person commits a public nuisance—

- (a) he is liable to criminal prosecution under the Indian Penal Code,
- (b) he may be proceeded against under this section.

S. 91.

- (c) he is liable to damages in a suit at the instance of a private individual who suffers special damage by reason of the nuisance, that is, damage beyond what is suffered by him in common with other persons affected by the nuisance (s)

These remedies, it is conceived, are concurrent. The institution of a criminal prosecution does not bar a suit under this section (t), nor does the institution of a suit under this section bar a criminal prosecution, though cases can be conceived where the Advocate General may, in the exercise of his discretion, refuse his consent under this section where a criminal prosecution is pending in respect of the same act or omission.

Illustrations.—A keeps his horses and waggons standing for an unreasonable time in the highway

(a) This is a public nuisance for which a criminal prosecution may be instituted against A

(b) Further, a suit may be instituted against A under the present section by the Advocate General, or by two or more persons with the consent in writing of the Advocate General, though no special damage has been caused, for an order requiring A to abate the nuisance, and for an injunction restraining him from continuing the nuisance. If the nuisance is repeated or continued, notwithstanding the injunction, he is liable for contempt where the decree granting the injunction is passed by a High Court (u) or he may be proceeded against under O 21, r 32, below, or he may be punished with imprisonment or fine or both under s 291 of the Penal Code

(c) If the horses and waggons are kept standing opposite a man's house, so that the access of customers is obstructed, the house is darkened, and the people in it are annoyed by bad smells, a suit may be brought against A by the occupiers for damages, the damage so caused being sufficiently special to entitle them to maintain the action (t). The mere fact that a suit has been instituted under this section against A by the Advocate-General at the relation of the occupiers, or by the occupiers themselves as plaintiffs with the consent of the Advocate General, will not preclude the occupiers from maintaining a private action against A for the special damage caused to them. Quære whether they can claim damages for the special damage in a suit brought under this section? It is conceived they cannot. It is submitted that the words "such other relief as may be appropriate" do not include such damages. In England, however, persons who have suffered special damage from a public nuisance may join the Attorney General as a co plaintiff in a suit brought by the Attorney General at their relation and the Attorney General may claim an injunction, and the persons specially damaged by the nuisance may claim damages (w). The present section does not warrant such a procedure in India. The suit contemplated by this section is a suit of a public nature, exclusively brought to vindicate a public right. The section finds its place in the Part headed "Special Proceedings" under the division "Suits relating to public matters," and this affords a sufficient indication of the object of the section.

Nature of proceedings under this section—Proceedings for a public nuisance in England were formerly commenced by an Information filed by the Attorney General in the High Court of Chancery They are now instituted by action in the High Court of Justice [See R S C, O 1, r 1] The action may be brought like the Information—

- (1) by the Attorney General acting ex officio, or
- (2) by the Attorney General at the relation of a private individual

Under the present section, a suit for a public nuisance may be instituted—

- (1) by the Advocate General acting ex officio or
- (2) by the Advocate General at the instance of relators, or
- (3) by two or more persons having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General

Difference between suit by Advocate General acting ex officio and suit by him at the relation of private individuals—Except for the purposes of costs, there is no difference between an ex officio suit and a suit at the relation of private individuals In both cases the Sovereign, as paterfamilias, sues by the Advocate General (z) “When the Attorney General proceeds at the relation of a private person or a corporation he takes the proceeding as representing the Crown and the Crown through the Attorney General is really a party to the litigation It is quite true that when the proceeding is taken at the relation of a subject, the practice is to insert his name in the proceedings as the relator, and to make him responsible for the costs but I do not think that this practice in any sense makes the relator a party to the proceedings, although he is responsible for the costs, any more than (to take a converse case) an infant, who brings an action, is responsible for the costs of it If I am right, it would seem that the practice of making the relator directly responsible for the costs of the action had its origin not in the protection of the defendant, but of the Crown’ (y) ‘When once the matter is in the hands of the Attorney General it becomes substantially a public proceeding in which the Attorney-General, if there be no relator, becomes as prosecutor responsible for the costs, while if a relator is introduced, the responsibility for costs is upon the latter’ (z)

Relator's interest in the suit—‘A relator need not have a personal interest in the matter except as one of the public he need not in fact be himself damaged at all’ (a)

Interest of persons suing with consent of Advocate General—Persons suing for a public nuisance with the consent of the Advocate General under the section need not have any personal interest in the matter of the suit, except as members of the public They are entitled to sue under this section ‘though,’ to use the words of the section, “no special damage has been caused [to them] In the other words, they need not have a cause of action in themselves

Injunction.—The following are some of the leading principles by which the Courts are guided in granting injunctions—

- 1 The injury complained of must be either irreparable or continuous (b) The remedy by way of injunction is therefore not appropriate for damage which is in its nature temporary and intermittent (c), or is accidental and occasional (d), or for an interference with legal rights which is trifling in amount and effect (e)
- 2 “Apprehension of future mischief from something in itself lawful and capable of being done without creating a nuisance is no ground for an injunction" (f) "There must, if no actual damage is proved, be proof of imminent danger, and there must also be proof that the apprehended damage will, if it comes, be very substantial" (g)

- Though no substantial damage is proved, the Court may grant an injunction if the defendants claim the right to continue doing that which the Court has held they are not entitled to do (h)
- 4 Where an illegal act is committed which in its nature tends to the injury of the public, an injunction will be granted to restrain the act without proof of actual injury to the public (i)
- 5 Where the plaintiff has proved his right to an injunction against a nuisance, it is no part of the duty of the Court to enquire in what way the defendant can best remove it, the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction at once, and it is the duty of the defendant to find his own way out of the difficulty whatever inconvenience or expense it may put him to. But where the difficulty of removing the nuisance is considerable, the Court may suspend the operation of the injunction for a time (j)
- 6 No length of time can legalize a public nuisance. Though twelve years user may bind the right of an individual, yet the public have a right to demand the suppression of a nuisance apart from the length of time for which it may have continued (k)
- 7 A public nuisance is not excused on the ground that it causes some convenience or advantage [Indian Penal Code, s. 268]

"Declaration.—A suit may be instituted under this section by two or more Mahomedans for a declaration that they are entitled to carry tabuts in procession along a public road for immersion in the sea, against persons who obstruct them in doing so, and for an injunction restraining them from interfering in the exercise of their right (l)

"Other relief"—The removal of a public nuisance, e.g. encroachment on a public street, may be directed by the Court under this part of the section (m).

Sub-section (2)—The Code of Criminal Procedure contains provisions for the removal of a public nuisance by summary proceedings before a Magistrate (n). It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where special damage is caused to a private individual by a public nuisance, he has a right of suit against the person causing the nuisance for a removal of the nuisance, and a Civil Court may pass a decree for removing the nuisance, notwithstanding that an order for the like purpose might be made by a Magistrate (o). This right is saved by sub section (2).

Instances of public nuisance—"Public or common nuisance affect the King's subjects at large or some considerable portion of them, such as the inhabitants of a town, and the person therein offending is liable to criminal prosecution. A private nuisance affects only one person out of a determinate number of persons, and is the ground of civil proceedings only' (p) Building over any part of a public street is a public nuisance, for such act must necessarily cause obstruction to persons who may have occasion to use their public right over the part encroached upon. The public is entitled to the full width of the public street, however wide it may be and whoever appropriates any part of the street by building over it infringes the right of the public to use the part built over (q). An obstruction is not the less a nuisance because it is on a part of the street not commonly used or otherwise leaves room enough for the ordinary amount of traffic (r). On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta, as regards tidal navigable rivers that it is not any encroachment, however slight that would constitute a public nuisance. It seems to us rather, the Court said 'that there must be some evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in section 268 [of the Indian Penal Code] (s).

Acts which merely offend the sentiments of a class do not amount to a public nuisance. In India it must often happen that acts are done by the followers of a creed which must be offensive to the sentiments of those who follow other creeds. Upon this principle it has been held that the placing of a Mahomedan symbol in the neighbourhood of a Hindu temple is not a public nuisance, though likely to cause annoyance to Hindus (t). Similarly, it is not a public nuisance to expose on the verandah of a house meat cut up for a dinner, though it may annoy the feelings of Jains frequenting a temple close by the house (u). But wilfully slaughtering cattle in a public street so that the groans and blood of the animals could be heard and seen by the passers by is a public nuisance for it must necessarily cause annoyance to every one of the passers by Hindu European Mahomedan or other who was not utterly devoid not merely of refinement but also of all proper feelings (v).

Changes introduced by the section—This section corresponds with s 539 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars

- 1 The words, "public purposes of a charitable or religious nature," have been substituted for the words public, charitable or religious purposes to remove the misconception that 'public' is merely co ordinate with 'charitable' or 'religious'
- 2 The words, "whether contentious or not," have been added to give effect to a Calcutta decision. See notes, "Whether contentious or not," on p 243 below
- 3 The words, "in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction," have been substituted for the words 'in the High Court or the District Court'
- 4 The words, "or any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government," have been added in order to invest Courts subordinate to District Courts with power to try cases under this section.
- 5 Clause (a) is new It is intended to supersede a Madras decision, and give effect to the Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad decisions cited in note, "Clause (a) removing any trustee," on p 244 below
- 6 Clause (d) is also new It gives legislative recognition to a Bombay decision cited in note, "Clause (d) directing accounts and inquiries," on p 245 below
- 7 Sub section (2) is new It is intended to give effect to the view of the section taken by the Bombay High Court that this section is mandatory, and to supersede the decision to the contrary of the other High Courts See notes, 'Sub section (2) this section is mandatory,' on p 251 below

Object of the section—“The real object of the special provisions of this section seems to us to be clear Persons interested in any trust were, if they could all join, always competent to maintain a suit against any trustee for his removal for breach of trust, but where the joining of all of them was inconvenient or impracticable, it was considered desirable that some of them might sue without joining the others, provided they obtained the consent of the Advocate General or of the Collector of the District and this condition was imposed to prevent an indefinite number of reckless and harassing suits being brought against trustees by different persons interested in the trust" (w)

Representative suit and res judicata—The suit contemplated by this section is a representative suit, that is, a suit which is prosecuted by individuals not for their own interests, but as representatives of the general public (x). That being so, it is conceived that the provisions of s 13, Explan VI, as to res judicata, apply to a decision in a suit under this section (y).

Jurisdiction.—Where the trustees and the trust fund are within the jurisdiction of a Court, but the charity is to be founded in a territory out of the jurisdiction of that Court, the Court has jurisdiction to pass a decree declaring the trusts upon which the fund is to be held, but it cannot go further in the way of settling a scheme, and it will leave it to the Court of the place in which the charity is to be carried out to settle the scheme (z).

Who may sue under this section.—A suit under this section may be brought—

- (1) by the Advocate General, and outside the Presidency towns, by the Collector or such officer as the Local Government may appoint in that behalf (see s 93), or
- (2) by two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General

"Interest in the trust"—When a suit under this section is not instituted by the Advocate General, it must be brought by at least two persons, and such persons must have "an interest" in the trust. § 539 of the Code of 1877 contained the words "a direct interest". Those words seem to have been taken from the judgment of Lord Eldon in In re the Bedford Charity (a). Those words also occurred in s 539 of the Code of 1882. That section was amended by s 44 of Act 7 of 1888, and the words "an interest" were substituted for the words "a direct interest". It must have appeared to the Legislature that the limitation of a "direct" interest was not expedient in India, and hence the section must have been amended (b). The effect of the amendment has been to widen the class of persons who are entitled to institute a suit under this section (c). Thus persons entitled to worship in a temple have such an interest in the trust as to enable them to institute a suit under this section against the trustees of the temple (d). Similarly persons residing in a village, whose business it was to conduct pilgrims to a shrine and perform the worship of the idol on their behalf, were held to have a sufficient interest to entitle them to sue the shevaks or ministers of the idol under this section (e). Likewise worshippers at a mosque have "an interest" within the meaning of this section in the trusts of the mosque (f). But the interest must be an existing interest and not a mere contingency, the mere possibility of succession to the managership of trust properties in respect of which the suit is brought is not sufficient to give a right to sue (g). It has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that the "interest" contemplated by this section must be a present and substantial interest and not sentimental or remote. Thus public Hindu temples are

- 5 Clause (a) is new. It is intended to supersede a Madras decision, and give effect to the Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad decisions cited in note, "Clause (a) removing any trustee," on p. 244 below
- 6 Clause (d) is also new. It gives legislative recognition to a Bombay decision cited in note, "Clause (d) directing accounts and inquiries," on p. 245 below
- 7 Sub section (2) is new. It is intended to give effect to the view of the section taken by the Bombay High Court that this section is mandatory, and to supersede the decision to the contrary of the other High Courts. See notes, "Sub section (2) this section is mandatory," on p. 251 below

Object of the section.—"The real object of the special provisions of this section seems to us to be clear. prima facie to be taken to be dedicated for the use of all Hindus resorting to them. But the bare possibility, however remote, that a Hindu might desire to resort to a particular temple does not give him "an interest" in the trust sufficient to entitle him to sue under this section. Hence where a suit was brought under this section by a Hindu residing in Madras and another residing in Tellicherry in respect of a temple situated in Tellicherry, and it appeared that the former had gone to worship in the temple on one or two occasions in the past and might go there to worship in the future if business took him to Tellicherry, it was held that though he had a right as a Hindu to worship in the temple, he had not such an interest in the trust as to entitle him to sue under this section (h). A different view has been taken by the Lahore High Court (i). It has been held by the Judicial Committee that descendants of the founder of a public Hindu chattram, although only in female lines of the founder, are "persons having an interest in the trust," and consequently they are entitled to maintain a suit under this section, even though they might never themselves make use of the chattram (j).

Consent of the Advocate-General.—The "consent in writing" required by this section must be a specific permission given to two or more persons by name, a permission given to one applicant by name 'and another' is not a sufficient compliance with the terms of this section (k). The High Court of Bombay has held that a suit under this section brought by only one plaintiff with the consent of the Advocate General is bad at its institution, and the plaint cannot be amended by the addition of a second plaintiff, though the Advocate General may consent to the amendment, the reason given being that the section nowhere speaks of the consent of the Advocate General to an amendment of the plaint, and that a suit which was bad at its inception is not bettered by its amendment (l). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that persons interested may be added as parties to the suit with the consent of the Advocate-General under O 1, r 10. It has thus been held by that Court that if a suit is brought by A alone under this section (m), or by A and B of whom B has no interest in the trust (n), the plaint may be amended by adding C, a person interested, as a party plaintiff in either case with the consent of the Advocate General. Similarly it has been held by that Court that if a suit be brought by A and B, and neither of them has any interest in the trust, the plaint may be amended by adding the Advocate-General as a plaintiff on his application (o).

The "consent in writing" required by this section is a condition precedent to the institution of the suit to which such consent relates. If, therefore, no valid consent is given before the institution of the suit, the suit must be dismissed, or the plaintiff may be allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The defect cannot be rectified after the institution of the suit (p). And where such consent is given, the suit must be confined to the matters included in the consent, it is not competent to the Court to grant reliefs other than those included in the terms of the consent (q). Further, where a suit is brought under this section, no amendment should be permitted without the sanction of the Advocate General. Where a plaint in a suit brought under this section is amended without the consent of the Advocate General, e.g., where a new party is added as a defendant and possession of the trust property is claimed from him the Court must dismiss the suit (r). It is an invariable practice in the Bombay Presidency for the Advocate General to endorse his consent upon the plaint (s).

The Advocate General in giving his consent has to exercise his judgment in the matter, and see not only whether the persons suing are persons who have an interest in the trust but also whether the trust is a public trust of the character defined in the section, and whether there are prima facie grounds for thinking that there has been a breach of trust (t). Where the sanction given by the Advocate General is so worded as to indicate that the Advocate General has not exercised his judgment, it is not a defect fatal to the suit, but a mere irregularity falling within the scope of s. 99, hence the decree in the suit will not be interfered with in appeal unless the irregularity is shown to have affected the decision of the suit on the merits (u).

Public purposes.—This section relates to those charities only in which the public are interested. A trust for a public Hindu temple is a trust for a public purpose of a religious nature within the meaning of this section (v). A mutt that is otherwise private does not become public simply because some persons are fed when gurupuja is performed and a water pandal is maintained in the mutt during the hot season (w). But where a number of the public had always used a temple and there was attached to it a dharmashala, and the surplus funds not required for the service of the temple were to be applied to feeding travellers and maintaining a sadarani, it was held that the intention of the founder was to devote the property to public purposes of a religious and charitable nature (x). A trust is not the less a trust for a public purpose because the main object of the trust is the support of faqirs of a particular sect and the propagation of the tenets of that sect (y).

'Any alleged breach of trust'—These words are not equivalent to "any alleged breach of any admitted trust." It is not therefore a condition precedent to the applicability of the section that the trust alleged by the plaintiffs must be one admitted by the defendants (z).

'Where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust'—To bring a suit within this section there must either be a breach of trust or the directions of the Court are necessary for the administration of the trust. The directions referred to in this section are such as are necessary for the carrying out of the trust and as are given to a trustee, either the existing trustee, where there is one or the new trustee, where one is to be appointed. The nature of the reliefs (specified in the section) shows what is meant by the words 'deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust' (a). The view thus expressed derives support from the language of sub-sec (2) which implies that it is only a suit claiming one or more of the reliefs specified in sub-sec (1) that requires to be instituted in conformity with the provisions of sub-sec (1).

'Whether contentious or not'—These words are new. They are intended to give effect to a decision of the Calcutta High Court under s. 539 of the Code of 1882 that the section was not confined to non contentious proceedings and that it applied to contentious suits also (b), and the opinion to the same effect of Best and Weir, JJ., in an earlier Madras case (c).

Who may be sued under this section—A defendant in a suit under this section need not be either a de jure or de facto trustee, otherwise no suit can be brought under this section in a case in which all trustees are dead or refuse to act (d). Thus a suit may be brought under this section against persons in possession of the trust property who claim adversely to the trust that is, claim to be the owners of the property (e), or against persons who deny the validity of the trust (f). But a suit against one who is merely a servant for misappropriation of the trust property does not fall under this section (g). See notes "Trustee," on p 245 below

Clause (a): removing any trustee—This clause is new. Though this clause did not occur in the corresponding s 539 of the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad (h) following an earlier decision of the Madras High Court (i), that a suit for the removal of a trustee of a public trust and for the appointment of a new trustee came under that section, though the removal of a trustee was not one of the reliefs specified in that section. Such a relief it was said was either covered by the words 'such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require,' or it was implied in the clause providing for the appointment of new trustees. On the other hand, it was held by the Madras High Court in a later case that such a suit did not come under that section (j) sub s (1) cl (a) of the present section gives effect to the Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad decisions. A suit for the removal of a trustee must therefore be instituted in conformity with the provisions of this section. It has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit by the trustees of a temple for a declaration that the appointment by the Devasthanam Committee of the defendant as a trustee in place of a deceased trustee is invalid and for an injunction to restrain him from interfering with the management of the temple, is in effect a suit for the removal of the defendant from the office of trustee and it cannot be instituted without the sanction required by this or the next section (k). A similar view has been taken by the Patna High Court (l). This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Bombay on the ground that to bring a suit within this section there must either be an alleged breach of trust or the direction of the Court must be deemed necessary for the administration of the trust, and that neither of these conditions was present in the Madras case. The Bombay case was similar to the Madras case and it was held that the case did not fall within this section (m).

In a suit under this section by two trustees of a temple against a co trustee for his removal the Court has the power to investigate charges of misconduct made by the defendant against the plaintiffs and even to remove them (n).

In framing a scheme of management under this section [see clause (g)] it is desirable to include a provision for the removal of trustees for breach of trust, for where such a provision is included the removal of a defaulting trustee may be obtained by an application in execution of the decree, and the costs and trouble of a regular suit which would otherwise be probably necessary may thus be avoided (n)

In connection with the removal of a trustee, it may be noted that there is no hard and fast rule that because a manager of a shrine has arrogated to himself the position of owner he should be removed from the office of trustee. Each case must be decided with reference to its circumstances (o). Thus it has been held that mere lax and improvident management on the part of the manager of a shrine, fostered by the belief that he was entitled to manage the trust property free from control and very much as though he was its absolute owner, is no ground for removing him from the trust (p).

"Trustee."—A person appointed trustee by the Court, though his appointment may be impeached as being illegal, is a trustee within the meaning of clause (a), and not a trespasser (q). So also is a trustee de son tort, that is, a person who is not appointed a trustee, but who takes charge of the trust property and purports to manage it as trust property (r). The Acharya of a temple is a "constructive" trustee within the meaning of this section and he may be sued as such (s).

Clause (b): appointing new trustee.—A suit for the appointment of new trustees of a temple on the ground that the defendants are not lawful trustees and that the office of trustees is therefore vacant, is a suit under clause (b) of this section (t).

Under this section, the Court in sanctioning a scheme may provide for the appointment of additional or new trustees though such appointment may not be in conformity with the original constitution of the trust or with the rules in force in respect to it (u).

Clause (d): direction accounts and inquiries.—This clause is new. Under the corresponding s 539 of the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Court of Bombay, that a suit to remove the trustees of a public charity, and to compel them to account, and to make good the losses sustained by the charity by reason of default on the part of the trustees, and for the appointment of new trustees, was a suit within that section, though a relief for accounts was not one of the reliefs specifically mentioned in that section. Such a relief, it was said, was covered by the words "further or other relief" (v). The present clause gives legislative recognition to the above decision.

Clause (e): apportionment of income.—A suit for a declaration as to what proportion of the trust property [e.g., offerings placed by devotees before an idol] should be allocated to the pujaris (officiating priests) and what to the gurus (temple servants) relates to a relief covered by cl (e) of the section (w).

Clause (f): authorizing trust property to be let.—A mutawali asking merely for sanction of the Court to grant a lease of the wakf property is not bound to bring a suit under this section (x).

Clause (g): settling a scheme.—This section vests a very wide discretion in the Court as regards directions to be given for the administration of public trusts

S. 92. In giving effect to the provisions of the section and in appointing new trustees and settling a scheme the Court is entitled to take into consideration not merely the wishes of the founder, so far as they can be ascertained, but also the past history of the institution, and the way in which the management is carried on theretofore, in conjunction with other existing conditions that may have grown up since its foundation (y). The Court may refuse to frame a scheme where no mismanagement is proved (z)

A scheme framed by the Court may be varied, if good cause is shown (a) But where a scheme is once settled, it precludes a suit to establish a private right to manage the property [e.g., hereditary trusteeship] which, if established, would interfere with the scheme settled by Court (b)

The Court has power under this section to frame a scheme in respect of a public temple though it be under the control of a Temple Committee constituted under the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 (c) But where a trust is a private trust, e.g., for a family idol, the settlement of a scheme under this section is inappropriate (d)

In decrees passed under this section liberty is generally reserved to the parties to apply to the Court as occasion arises As to the effect of such a clause, see the under-mentioned case (e)

Where it is quite clear that a public trust has been properly constituted by will, it is not necessary that there should be first a suit for the administration of the estate of the testator before the trust could be the subject of a suit under this section. But it is otherwise where it is doubtful whether there would be funds sufficient for the charitable bequest In the latter case an administration suit may become necessary before any scheme can be framed under this section (f) Where the trust funds are not ascertained, and the defendants are accountable for their management of the trust property, the proper course is to take the accounts before a scheme is framed (g)

Clause (h): further or other relief.—“The words ‘granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require,’ must be read with what has preceded as referring to further relief to which the party may be entitled which arises out of the existence of the trust in respect of which the suit has been brought” Therefore, where the only relief claimed in a suit is for a declaration that certain property is wakf property, the suit does not come within the purview of this section Such a relief does not come within the words ‘further or other relief’ (h) “The general clause dealing with ‘further or other relief’ ought to be read with the [seven] preceding specific clauses, and the nature of the reliefs which may be properly granted under it is of the same character as the reliefs which may be granted under the preceding clauses The [seven] specific clauses are not merely illustrative, but furnish an indication of the nature of the relief which may be granted in a suit under this section” Thus it has been held that the mere fact that the plaintiffs sue for a declaration that they are the trustees of a temple and of the properties attached thereto, does not bring the suit within this section, such a relief does not come within the words ‘further or other relief’ (i)

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a prayer that a deed of trust may be construed by the Court and the true scope and object of the trust fund may be determined by the Court comes within the words "further or other relief" (g) [See notes, "Suits merely for a declaration of trust," on p 250 below]

Conditions of applicability of the section.—This section does not apply, unless—

- (1) there is a trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature,
- (2) there is a breach alleged of such trust, or the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of such trust, and
- (3) the relief claimed is one or other of the reliefs mentioned in the section (k) [see notes, 'sub sec (2),' on p 251 below]

Where a suit is instituted in the ordinary manner, the question frequently arises whether it ought to have been instituted in conformity with the provisions of this section. The answer is that if all the three conditions mentioned above are present, the suit must be instituted in conformity with the provisions of this section, that is to say, it must be instituted either by the Advocate General or by two or more persons interested in the trust with the consent of the Advocate General [see sub section (2) and notes thereto]. If the suit is not brought in conformity with the provisions of this section, it should be dismissed [see notes above 'Consent of the Advocate General']. But if any one of these three conditions is absent the suit is outside the scope of the present section, and it is to be instituted in the ordinary manner. The mere fact that a suit relates to a public charitable or religious trust, or that it relates to property held on such trust, is not sufficient to bring it within the scope of this section [see notes below 'Suits to enforce private rights,' and "Suits for possession of trust property against trespassers and against alienees from trustees"]. At the same time it must be noted that a suit which is clearly within the scope of this section cannot be treated as one outside its scope, because besides the reliefs permissible by this section reliefs not allowed by the section are claimed in the suit [see notes 'Suits for removal of trustees, etc' p 246, post].

Suit to enforce private rights.—The suit contemplated by this section is a representative suit [see notes, "Representative suit," on p 241 above]. Suits brought not to vindicate or establish the right of the public in respect of a public trust, but to remedy a particular infringement of an individual right or to vindicate a private right, do not fall within this section (l). Such suits are to be instituted in the ordinary manner and not under this section. The following are instances of suits of this character —

- (1) A suit by a person claiming to be a co trustee of a certain darga and entitled as such to a share with the defendant trustee in the management and profits thereof Miya Vali Ulla v Sayad Baza (1898) 22 Bom 496

This view is submitted, is not correct. See 45 Mad 113 69 I C 304 (22) A M 17, cited in all (6) below.

- (5) It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the right of a Mahomedan to use a mosque is not a public but a private right. It is like the right to use a private road, any one who has the right may maintain a suit in respect of it [Jauahra v Hussain (1885) 7 All 178, at pp 182 183]. To such a suit the provisions of this section do not apply. Thus it has been held that any Mahomedan entitled to frequent a mosque may, if property belonging to the mosque has been sold by the person managing the same for the time being for his private debts, maintain a suit for a declaration that the property is usul property, and to set aside the sale and evict the purchaser [Zafaryag Ali v Bahhtawar Singh (1883) 5 All 497]. Similarly, if land attached to a mosque is encroached upon, any Mahomedan entitled to use the mosque may sue to eject the trespasser. And if the mosque be in a dilapidated condition, and a Mahomedan frequenting the mosque, or one looking after it, is desirous of repairing it but is obstructed by a third person, he may maintain a suit to establish his right to repair the mosque [Jauahra v Akbar Husain (1885) 7 All 178]. The contrary, however, has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in Jan Ali v Ram Nath (1882) 8 Cal 32, and Lutifunnessa Bibi v Azirun Bibi (1885) 11 Cal 33. According to these decisions the right sought to be established in such suits as the above is not a private but a public right, and it can only be enforced by a suit brought in conformity with the provisions of this section. But in a later Calcutta case [Mohiuddin v Sayiduddin 1893] 20 Cal 810] it was pointed out that the reasoning of the Allahabad cases, showing that the right of worship of each worshipper in a Mahomedan mosque or religious endowment was an independent right wholly irrespective of the rights of the other worshippers, was correct. The view taken in the earlier Calcutta decisions is, it is submitted, not correct (m).

See notes above, 'Trustee'

Suits for removal of trustees for unlawful alienation of trust property and against alienees from such trustees—A common type of suits under this section is a suit against the trustee of a charity for his removal on the ground that he has unlawfully alienated the trust property treating it as his private property, and for the appointment of a new trustee in his place It is clear that such suit is within this section for the relief claimed is one under cl (a) of this section, and the ground on which the relief is claimed is a breach of trust in alienating the property It is also clear that the Court cannot remove the trustee, unless it finds that the property is trust property and that it has been wrongfully alienated by the trustee The question we have to consider is, whether the Court has the power, in the absence of the alienee to declare that the property is trust property and that the alienation is unlawful It has been held by the High Court of Madras, that an alienee is not a proper party to a suit under this section, and that if he is joined as a party by the plaintiff, the suit as against him should be dismissed But this, it has been held, does not preclude the Court from determining in a suit against the trustee alone whether the property is trust property, and declaring if it is so found, that it is trust property. But the transferee, not being a party to the suit, is not bound by the declaration, and if a suit is subsequently brought against him for possession of the property, it is open to him to contend that the property is not trust property (o). A similar view has been taken by the High Court of Calcutta (p). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad, that the alienee, though not a necessary party to the suit (q), is a proper party (r), and that if he is joined as a party, and the Court declares that the property is trust property, he will be bound by that declaration in a subsequent suit for possession against him (s). The High Court of Bombay has gone further and held that the transferee is not only a proper but a necessary party, and that no such declaration can be made in his absence (t). But all the High Courts are agreed that in a suit such as the above a decree cannot be passed against the alienee directing him to deliver possession of the property to the plaintiffs, though he is a party to the suit, as such relief is neither specifically mentioned in the section nor implied in cl. (h), and that the remedy of the newly appointed trustee is to institute a separate suit for possession against him (u). In a Calcutta case (v), however, Greaves, J., went to the extreme length of holding that the alienee may be joined as a party to the suit having regard to the provisions of O 1, r 3, and, further, that if the transfer to him is invalid, he may be declared to be a trustee of the trust property and be directed to convey the trust property to the newly appointed trustees. But this decision was reversed in appeal. Mookerji, J. said "Once it is held, as I think it must be held, that a suit for ejectment of a trespasser or of a transferee from a trustee is not within the scope of section 92, it follows as a necessary corollary, that the Court is not competent to bring before the forum any such person under either of the two rules mentioned" (w), that is O 1, r 3, and O 1, r 10 (2).

Suits merely for a declaration of trust.—This section presupposes the existence of a trust for the administration of which it is necessary to make provision. Hence it does not apply to a suit brought solely for the purpose of having a declaration of the Court that certain property is walk, the fact of endowment being denied on the other side (x). Nor does this section apply to a suit brought merely for a declaration that the plaintiffs are trustees of an endowment (y). See notes, "Clause (h)," on p. 246 above.

Suits for a declaration that the defendant is not a properly appointed trustee and for an injunction against him.—See notes, "Clause (c) removing any trustee," on p 244 above not empower the Local Government to direct the transfer of a particular suit pending in a District Court to a particular Judge. The authority must be a general one to receive suits under this section ()

The expression 'Principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction' in this section does not include the Court of an Additional District Judge appointed under s 8 of the Civil Courts Act VII of 1887 (a) unless the District Judge has under sub sec (2) of that section assigned to him the functions of a District Judge relating to all suits cognizable by the District Judge (b)

Where a suit is brought against an executor in the Court of a Subordinate Judge for the administration of the testator's estate the mere fact that the will contains directions for applying portions of the estate to charitable purposes does not bring the suit within this section. The Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction to entertain such a suit but if any questions relating to charitable bequests arise before him and a scheme has to be framed under this section he should hold the amount appropriated for charities in the possession of a Receiver until the Advocate General or the Collector obtains the directions of the District Court (c)

Sub-section (2) this section is mandatory—The Legislature has by enacting this section constituted a special tribunal for the trial of a class of suits which it has removed from the cognizance of the ordinary Courts. These are suits for any of the reliefs specified in sub sec (1) in cases where there is an alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust. This class of suits can only be instituted in the special Courts mentioned in this section and they can only be brought either by the Advocate General or by two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General. It has been so enacted by subs (2) of the present section. Under the corresponding section 539 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 it was doubtful whether every suit of the character described above was to be instituted in the manner aforesaid. Sub s (2) makes it clear that every such suit must be so instituted. It enacts that no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub sec (1) shall be instituted without the consent of the Advocate General (cc). But sub sec (2) must be read with sub sec (1). Reading sub sec (2) with sub sec (1) it follows that it is not every suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub sec (1) that should be brought with the consent of the Advocate General but those suits only which besides claiming any of those reliefs are brought by individuals as representatives of the general public. It has thus been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that a suit by a trustee of a public religious trust against a co trustee for accounts does not fall within this section though the relief claimed is the one specified in sub sec (1) cl (d). Such a suit is not a representative suit. The relief is sought not in the larger interest of the public but merely for the purpose of vindicating the private rights of one of the trustees and of enabling him to discharge the duties and liabilities which are imposed upon him by the trust (d)

The doubt referred to in the preceding paragraph arose in the following way. The Code of 1859 did not contain any special provisions for the institution of suits relating to public charities. Such provisions were introduced for the first time by s 539 of the Code of 1877. They were reproduced in s 539 of the Code of 1882, and they now find a place in sub s (1) of the present section. But neither the Code of 1877 nor the Code of 1882 contained any provision such as is contained in sub s (2). Before the enactment of the Code of 1877 suits relating to public charitable or religious trusts could be instituted in the ordinary Courts by certain persons as plaintiffs. Thus—

- (1) persons appointed supervisors or trustees could sue in any ordinary Court competent to hear the suit for the removal of the trustees for malversation and to obtain the appointment in their place of other fit and proper persons (c) similarly,
- (2) one or more of the members of a defined class of the general public [such as the Satchasi community of Chatra] could sue on behalf of the whole class, with the leave of the Court under s 30 [now O 1, r 8] in any ordinary Court competent to hear the suit, to obtain a declaration of their right to take part in the management of the worship of a goddess (f)

It will at once be seen that the above suits fall within the purview of the present section. They also came within the terms of s 539 of the earlier Codes. In the absence of any provision in s 539 similar to that contained in sub s. (2) the question arose whether these suits were to be instituted in the special Courts mentioned in s 539 and by the Advocate General as plaintiff, or whether they could be instituted as before in ordinary Courts and by persons who could have sued if s 539 had not been enacted. It was held by the High Court of Bombay that s 539 was mandatory, in other words that every suit of the character mentioned in that section must be brought in accordance with its provisions, and not otherwise. That is to say, the suits referred to above could no longer be brought by the supervisors as plaintiffs in the one case and by the members of the community in the other, but they must be instituted either by the Advocate General or by two or more persons interested in the trust after obtaining the sanction of the Advocate General, and further, that these suits could only be brought in the special Courts indicated in that section, namely, the High Court or the District Court as the case might be (g). On the other hand it was held by the other High Courts that section 539 was permissive, and that it did not take away the right of suit which existed prior to and independently of it. According to these Courts suits of the character mentioned above could, notwithstanding the enactment of section 539, be brought as before by the abovenamed parties as plaintiffs in any Court competent to entertain those suits and it was not obligatory to institute them in accordance with the provisions of s 539 (h). Sub section (2) gives effect to the Bombay decisions, and supersedes the decisions of the other High Courts. It provides in distinct terms that no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub section (1) shall be instituted except in conformity with the provisions of that sub section. At the same time it declares that the special provisions of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 for the institution of suits governed by that Act are not affected by the provisions of this section. We proceed to consider the provisions of that Act and their bearing on the present section.

individuals for the support of mosques, temples, colleges and for other pious and beneficial purposes" was misappropriated by persons managing the endowments. It was therefore deemed expedient that the British Government should take charge of these endowments, and for that purpose and the purpose also of providing for the maintenance of bridges, serais, uttaras and other buildings erected for the use of the public, Regulation 19 of 1810 was passed, whereby the general superintendence of all religious and charitable endowments referred to above was vested in the Board of Revenue. That Regulation applied to endowments in Bengal. A similar Regulation being Regulation 7 of 1817, was subsequently passed to provide for like endowments in the Madras Presidency (i). Several years after the passing of these Regulations, it was thought that the connection of a Christian Government with the religious establishments of Hindus and Mahomedans was inexpedient, and a report was therefore called for by the Government of India in the year 1841 from the Collectors of all Districts with a view to divest themselves of the management of religious endowments, and transfer the management to properly qualified individuals. As a result Act 20 of 1863 was passed, whereby such of the provisions of the abovementioned Regulations as related to religious endowments were repealed, and provision was made for the transfer of all such endowments, in certain cases to trustees, and in others to committees (ss 38). But the duty of superintending over charitable endowments imposed on the Board of Revenue by the old Regulations is still retained, and, in fact, express care is taken in the Act to declare that this duty over charitable endowments is not intended to be affected or interfered with (ss 21, 23).

The Religious Endowments Act applies only to public religious endowments, as did the old Regulations. It does not apply to private religious endowments. S 14 of the Act provides that any person interested in any mosque, temple, or religious establishment may sue the trustees or members of a committee for any misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty committed by them in respect of the trust vested in them, and the Court may in such suit direct the specific performance of any act by them, and may decree damages and costs against them, and may also direct the removal of any of the trustees or any member of a committee. A suit which does not charge the trustees or member of a committee with misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty, does not fall under that section (j). S 18 provides that no suit under the Act shall be instituted without the leave of the Court.

The Act is in force in all Presidencies except the Presidency of Bombay where it is in force in North Canara only. But it does not apply to Presidency towns, so that a suit instituted in a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original jurisdiction inherited from the Supreme Court charging neglect of duty on the part of a temple trustee does not require the leave of the Court under s 18 of the Act (k).

After the passing of the Regulations above referred to, the Board of Revenue took over the management of some endowments, but in the large majority of cases they did not take charge of endowments created by private individuals. The operation of the Act, however, is not confined to such endowments as had actually been taken under the management of the Board of Revenue under the old Regulations. The Act applies, to every public religious endowment to which the provisions of the old Regulations applied, that is to say, to every public religious endowment

Supplemental Proceedings.

94. [Neu] In order to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated the Court may, if it is so prescribed,—

Supplemental proceedings

- (a) issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and bring him before the Court to show cause why he should not give security for his appearance and if he fails to comply with any order for security commit him to the civil prison,
- (b) direct the defendant to furnish security to produce any property belonging to him and to place the same at the disposal of the Court or order the attachment of any property,
- (c) grant a temporary injunction and in case of disobedience commit the person guilty thereof to the civil prison and order that his property be attached and sold,
- (d) appoint a receiver of any property and enforce the performance of his duties by attaching and selling his property,
- (e) make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient

This section summarizes the general powers of the Court in regard to interlocutory proceedings. The details of procedure have been relegated to Schedule I

The Religious Endowments Act applies only to public religious endowments, as did the old Regulations. It does not apply to private religious endowments. ■ 14 of the Act provides that any person interested in any mosque, temple, or religious establishment may sue the trustees or members of a committee for any misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty committed by them in respect of the trust vested in them, and the Court may in such suit direct the specific performance of any act by them, and may decree damages and costs against them, and may also direct the removal of any of the trustees or any member of a committee. A suit which does not charge the trustees or member of a committee with misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty, does not fall under that section (j). S 18 provides that no suit under the Act shall be instituted without the leave of the Court.

S. 92. created ' by the preceding Governments of this country and by individuals,' whether the management of the endowment was taken over by the Board of Revenue or not (i)

Reading s 92 of the Code and the Religious Endowments Act together we have the following result —

- (1) No suit in respect of charitable endowments of a public nature, claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub section (1) of section 92, can be brought except in conformity with the provisions of that sub section
- (2) In the case of religious endowments of a public nature to which the Religious Endowments Act applies, a suit charging the trustee manager, superintendent, or a member of a committee of a mosque, temple or religious establishment, with misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty, may be brought under the provisions of that Act with the leave of the principal Civil Court of original civil jurisdiction in the District in which the mosque, temple, or religious establishment is situate as provided by s 18 of the said Act, or it may be brought under the provisions of the Code with the consent of the Collector as provided by s 92 of the Code (m)
- (3) No suit in respect of religious endowments of a public nature to which the Religious Endowments Act does not apply, claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub section (1) of section 92, can be brought except in conformity with the provisions of that sub section.

Death of either plaintiff pending suit—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad, that where a suit is brought by two persons under this section and one of them dies pending the suit, the suit abates unless some other person is brought on the record in place of the deceased. Such person must be one who has an interest in the trust and he must have obtained the consent of the Advocate General as required by this section (n). On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit brought under this section being a representative suit there is no question of abatement, and the Court has power under O 1, s 10 (2) to add other persons interested in the trust as parties not because they are the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff but because they had become parties to the representative suit by the very fact of its being instituted on behalf of all persons interested in the trust, from this point of view, the consent of the Advocate General is not necessary to add another person interested in the trust as a party (o). The Chief Court of the Punjab has followed the Madras decisions (p). It has since been held by the Judicial Committee that where one of the two plaintiffs dies, the suit does not abate, as a suit under this section is a representative suit (q). The Allahabad decision it is submitted, is not correct.

Death of defendant-trustee p-nding suit—Where a suit is brought under this section against a trustee not only for his removal but for framing a scheme, and the scheme is one of the main reliefs sought the suit does not abate on the death of the trustee, and his successor in office may be brought on the record as a party defendant (r) The suit, of course, would abate, if it was solely for the removal of the trustee

Specific Relief Act, 1877, s 42—Where a suit falls within this section, the plaintiff cannot evade the requirements of the Code by framing the suit as one under s 42 of the Specific Relief Act (s). At the same time it is to be noted that where a suit is maintainable under this section and the plaintiff seeks any of the reliefs specified in the section, s 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not apply. Thus if a suit is brought under this section for a declaration that the defendants are not the lawful trustees and for the appointment of new trustees, the suit will not be dismissed because no consequential relief is claimed, namely, delivery of the trust property to the new trustees that may be appointed by the Court (f). [Sec 42 of the Specific Relief Act provides in effect that where a suit is brought for a declaratory decree, and the plaintiff is able to seek further relief than a mere declaration, but omits to do so, the suit should be dismissed.]

Limitation Act—The de jure managers and trustees of a public charity losing their right by limitation to oust the de facto trustees, does not confer on the latter immunity from a suit on the part of the Advocate General under this section (u).

A suit for accounts under this section against a trustee de son tort is governed by art 120 of the Limitation Act. Such a trustee is therefore liable to render accounts only for 11 years preceding the suit (z).

Relators cannot appeal in their own right.—Where a suit instituted under this section by the Advocate General at the instance of relators is dismissed and the Advocate General does not think fit to appeal, it is not competent to the relators to file an appeal on their own account against the decree dismissing the suit (v). The reason is that relators are not parties to the suit (x).

Cy-pres doctrine—Though the section does not expressly empower the Court to apply the cy pres doctrine in the settling of schemes, it would seem that the Court has the power to apply the doctrine (y).

93 [S 539, last para] The powers conferred by sections 91 and 92 on the Advocate-General may, outside the Presidency-towns, be, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, exercised also by the Collector or by such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf.

Collector—An Assistant Collector has no power under this section to give his consent to the institution of a suit of the kind contemplated by s 92 [for s 91] in the absence of the Collector. Where such a suit is instituted with the consent of the Assistant Collector, but not with the consent of the Collector, the plaint must be rejected under O 7, r 11 (z).

Supplemental Proceedings.

94. [New] In order to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated the Court may, if it is so prescribed,—
Supplemental proceedings

- (a) issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and bring him before the Court to show cause why he should not give security for his appearance and if he fails to comply with any order for security commit him to the civil prison ,
- (b) direct the defendant to furnish security to produce any property belonging to him and to place the same at the disposal of the Court or order the attachment of any property ,
- (c) grant a temporary injunction and in case of disobedience commit the person guilty thereof to the civil prison and order that his property be attached and sold ,
- (d) appoint a receiver of any property and enforce the performance of his duties by attaching and selling his property ,
- (e) make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient

This section summarizes the general powers of the Court in regard to interlocutory proceedings. The details of procedure have been relegated to Schedule I

Clauses (a) and (b) Arrest and attachment before judgment.—See O 38 below

Clauses (c) and (e) Temporary injunctions and interlocutory orders—See O 39 below

Clause (d) Appointment of receiver.—See O 40 below See also notes to s 51 Receiver in execution proceedings

95. [Ss 491, 497] (1) Where, in any suit in which an arrest or attachment has been effected or a temporary injunction granted under the last preceding section,—
Compensation for obtaining arrest attachment or injunction on insufficient grounds

- (a) it appears to the Court that such arrest, attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds, or

(b) the suit of the plaintiff fails and it appears to the Court that there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the same, S.

the defendant may apply to the Court, and the Court may, upon such application, award against the plaintiff by its order such amount, not exceeding one thousand rupees, as it deems a reasonable compensation to the defendant for the expense or injury caused to him

Provided that a Court shall not award, under this section, an amount exceeding the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction.

(2) An order determining any such application shall bar any suit for compensation in respect of such arrest, attachment or injunction

Changes introduced by the section—This section corresponds with ss 491 and 497 of the Code of 1882 except that the words by its order have been substituted for the words in its decree. The words by its order indicate that the award should no longer form part of the decree, but should be embodied in a separate order. The order is now made appealable by s 104

Scope of the section—This section provides for compensation to the defendant in the two following cases —

- I (1) Where an arrest or attachment before judgment has been effected or a temporary injunction has been granted (see Orders 38 and 39) and
- (2) such arrest attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds
- II (1) Where an arrest or attachment before judgment has been effected or a temporary injunction has been granted
- (2) the plaintiff fails in the suit and
- (3) there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the suit

In case II it is not necessary to show that the arrest attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds. It is enough if the plaintiff fails in the suit, and there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the suit. The principle is that a plaintiff who has obtained an arrest attachment or injunction by instituting a suit without any probable ground should be punished as much as a plaintiff who has obtained the process on insufficient grounds

This section is no bar to a regular suit—This section provides a summary remedy for an injured defendant and enables him to seek compensation for the injury done to him by the plaintiff by instituting proceedings by an application to the Court instead of by a suit. But the remedy under this section is optional and an injured defendant may, if he so chooses institute a regular suit against the plaintiff for compensation for wrongful arrest, attachment or injunction. This clearly appears from sub section (2) which impliedly recognizes the right of a defendant to institute a regular suit for compensation (a). In a suit, however for compensation the plaintiff must prove malice in fact in addition to the facts required to be proved by this section (b). But whether the proceeding is by way of suit or by an application under this section,

(b) Nanjappa v. Ganapathi (1912) 35 Mad 593, 171 C 56

S. 95. the defendant is not entitled to any compensation unless the attachment "has been effected" Merely procuring an order for attachment before judgment however maliciously is not sufficient to entitle the defendant to compensation (c) As to the period of limitation for a suit, see Limitation Act, 1908, sch I, arts 19, 29, 36 and 42, and also the undermentioned cases (d) As to suits for damages for temporary injunction improperly obtained, see the undermentioned cases (e)

"On insufficient grounds"—These words are equivalent to "without reasonable and probable cause" (f)

An award under this section is a bar to a regular suit—Once an application is made by a defendant under this section for compensation for wrongful arrest, attachment or injunction and an order is made under this section, the defendant cannot institute a regular suit for compensation for the same wrong whether any compensation is awarded to him or not In other words, the disposal of an application under this section has the effect of res judicata so as to bar any subsequent suit in respect of the same cause of action Note that it is the disposal of the application, and not the mere pressing of the application, that is a bar to a regular suit

Amount of compensation—The amount of compensation that may be awarded under this section cannot exceed Rs 1,000 Where a defendant claims a larger amount of compensation he must institute a regular suit

Right of defendant not served with summons to apply for compensation under this section—If a defendant is arrested before judgment, he is entitled to apply for compensation under this section, though he has not been served with the writ of summons in the suit (g)

Counter-claim for compensation in a summary suit—If a defendant who is arrested before judgment in a summary suit brought against him on a negotiable instrument under O 37, claims compensation for arrest under this section, he is entitled on that ground to apply for leave to defend the suit under O 37, r 3, and if a prima facie case is made out, leave to defend should be given (h)

Provincial Small Cause Courts—A Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction under this section to award compensation to a defendant for wrongful arrest or attachment (i) See s 7, cl (b)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this section see sec 104, sub-sec (1), cl (f)

S 491 of the Code of 1882 provided for compensation for a wrongful arrest and attachment S 497 provided for compensation for wrongful injunction An order under s 497 was appealable under that Code (j) but as to orders under s 491 it was held that they were not appealable (k) The present section combines the provisions of s 491 and 497, and s 104 gives a right of appeal from all orders under this section, whether they are orders made on an application for compensation for wrongful injunction or for wrongful arrest or attachment

Undertaking—Where a temporary injunction has been granted on an undertaking by the plaintiff to compensate the defendant for any loss that may arise by reason of the injunction, the undertaking is to be enforced by an application under this section to the Court which granted the injunction. A attaches a house in execution of a decree against B. C sues for a declaration that the house belongs to him, and obtains a temporary injunction staying the sale on his undertaking to pay interest to A at 11 per centum on the value of the house if his suit be dismissed. C's suit is dismissed. In such a case the procedure to be adopted by A to recover the interest from C is to apply not to the Court executing the decree, but to the Court which granted the injunction (1).

Chartered High Court—Where a temporary injunction has been granted by a Chartered High Court on an undertaking by the plaintiff to compensate the defendant for any loss that may arise by reason of the injunction, the Court, it is submitted, has the power to award compensation to the defendant exceeding Rs 1,000 on an application by the defendant in that behalf. The case of an "undertaking" is a case outside the scope of this section.

PART VII.

Appeals.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES.

96. [S 540 Jud Act, 1873, s 49.] (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court.

(2) An appeal may lie from an original decree passed ex parte.

(3) No appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties.

Changes introduced by the section—Sub section (3) is new. In other respects this section corresponds with s 540 of the Code of 1882. As to the effect of sub section (3), see notes below under the head "Sub section (3) consent decrees not appealable."

Compare Judicature Act, 1873, s 49, which provides that "no order made by the High Court or any judge thereof, by the consent of parties, shall be subject to any appeal except by leave of the Court or judge making such order."

Letters Patent appeals—The right of appeal from a decree of a single Judge of a High Court to the High Court is governed not by this section, but cl 15 of the Letters Patent. "The Code makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court, that is to say, from a single Judge of the High Court. This right of appeal depends on clause 15 of the Charter" (m). But as regards procedure, the Code and the rules there in contained, especially the rules contained in O 41, apply to proceedings in a High Court under the Letters Patent, save so far as the Code expressly provides to the contrary (mm).

Right of appeal—It is not to be assumed that there is a right of appeal in every matter which comes under the consideration of a Court, such right must be given by statute, or by some authority equivalent to a statute (n). "Unless a right of appeal is clearly given by statute, it does not exist, whereas a litigant has independently of any statute a right to institute any suit of a civil nature in some Court or another" (o). No right of appeal can be given except by express words (p). Note in the present section the express words, "an appeal shall lie from every decree."

Agreement not to appeal—An agreement whereby the parties agree not to appeal from a decree is binding upon the parties thereto if it is for a lawful consideration and is otherwise valid (q). But an agreement by the next friend of a minor not to appeal is not binding on the minor (r).

Decree—As to the distinction between a decree and an order, see p. 4 above. All decrees are appealable unless the appeal is barred under this Code or any other law. But all orders are not appealable. The only orders appealable are those specified in s. 104.

Where decree not drawn up—No appeal can be entertained from a decree unless the decree has been drawn up (s). See notes to s. 33, also notes to s. 97, Where preliminary decree not drawn up.

Appeal from ex parte decree—S. 540 of the Code of 1882 as it originally stood did not contain any clause allowing appeals from ex parte decrees. The clause allowing such appeals was added by s. 45 of the Civil Procedure Code Amending Act 7 of 1888. Prior to that Act it was doubted in some cases whether an appeal lay from an ex parte decree. As to the powers of an appellate Court in the matter of ex parte decrees, see notes to O. 9 r. 13. Whether remedies concurrent.

Forum of appeal—The value of a suit, that is the amount or value of the subject matter thereof determines the forum of suit that is the Court in which the suit is to be filed. It also determines the forum of appeal that is the Court to which the appeal lies. What then is the value of a suit for the purposes of appeal? Now a plaintiff may in his plaint fix a sum definitively as the amount of his claim as in a suit for debt or he may fix it approximately or tentatively as in a suit for accounts or for mesne profits [O. 7, r. 2]. Where the plaintiff fixes a sum definitively, it is that sum that determines the forum of appeal, and not the amount affected by the decree and involved in the appeal (i). Where the plaintiff fixes a sum approximately there is a difference of opinion as to the forum of appeal. According to the Calcutta High Court, it is the amount decreed by the first Court as the amount due to the plaintiff that determines the forum of appeal (u). According to the Bombay (v) and Allahabad (w) High Courts it is the amount determined by the first Court as the amount due to the plaintiff and accepted by the plaintiff by payment of additional court fee that determines the forum of appeal. According to the Madras High Court, it is the amount or value of the subject matter as fixed in the plaint though approximately, that determines the Court to which the appeal lies and not the amount decreed. It has accordingly been held by that Court that where in a suit for account filed in the Court of a District Munsif whose jurisdiction is limited to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 2,000, the plaintiff fixes his claim approximately at Rs. 2,000, and the Munsif passes a decree for more than Rs. 5,000 the appeal from the Munsif's decree lies not to the High Court but to the District Court (x). Where a suit is dismissed by the first Court—in which case the mesne profits remain undetermined—

96. s 375 of the Code of 1882 except that certain words which occurred at the end of s 375 have now been omitted. S 375 ran as follows —

If a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the whole or any part of the matter of the suit such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final so far as it relates to so much of the subject matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement compromise or satisfaction "

O 23, r 3, is a reproduction of s 375 with the omission of the words italicized above (m). This omission has been supplied by sub section (3) of the present section. The said words barred an appeal from a consent decree only so far as such decree related to so much of the subject matter of the suit as was dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction on which the decree was based. If a consent decree dealt with any matter extraneous to the suit, that is, matters that did not relate to the subject matter of the suit, it was held that the decree, though passed with the consent of parties, was appealable, and that it should be modified by omitting therefrom such terms as did not relate to the subject matter of the suit (n). As regards the terms so excluded it was held that they might be enforced in a separate suit as a contract (o). It would be so also under the present Code. See in this connection the observations of the Judicial Committee in Hemanta Kumari Debi v Midnapur Zamindari Company (p).

Both under O 23 r 3, and the corresponding s 375 of the Code of 1882 the agreement or compromise in terms of which the Court is invited to pass a consent decree must be 'lawful'. It was accordingly observed by the High Court of Bombay in Goculdas v James Scott (q), a case under s 375 that 'notwithstanding the declared finality of the decree, an appeal against it would be maintainable where the party against whom the decree was passed alleged that there had been in fact no 'lawful agreement' come to, in which case the condition precedent to the making of the decree would not be fulfilled." These observations were mere obiter dicta, but they were adopted by the High Court of Madras in Sridharan v Puramathan (r) where it was held that an appeal would lie from a consent decree if the agreement in terms of which the decree was passed was not lawful. The present Code does not allow an appeal from a consent decree in any case. But it is competent to either party to appeal from the order recording the compromise where the compromise is not a lawful compromise, on the ground that the Court had no power under O 22 r 3 to record a compromise that was not lawful [O 43, r 1, cl (m)]. See notes to O 22 r 3, "Appeal".

Plaintiffs sued upon an alleged account stated, but the Court found that it was fraudulent and fabricated. Plaintiffs being thus compelled to rely on items of claim contained in the general account it was found that each of those items was barred by limitation. The defendant nevertheless consented to a decree being passed in the plaintiff's favour for such of the items as were proved, and the trial Court passed a decree upon that basis. It was held that the finding on the question of limitation standing the decree was a consent decree and the plaintiffs were not entitled to appeal from the decree (s).

§ 96: the sum stated in the plaint determines the forum of appeal (y) It has been recently held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta that where a suit is properly brought in the Court of a Munsif for recovery of possession of land and mesne profits pendente lite are claimed or assessed at a sum beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif, the Munsif has jurisdiction to fix such mesne profits and pass a decree for a sum beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction The value of such a suit for purposes of jurisdiction is the value of the immovable property plus mesne profits up to the date of the suit where such profits are claimed If a suit is rightly entertained within the jurisdiction of the Munsif and a decree passed, his power to grant the proper and adequate relief is not affected by any event which increases the value of the relief during the pendency of the suit The forum of appeal is determined by the value of the suit and not by the amount decreed (z) The undermentioned decisions (a) of the same High Court must be taken to have been overruled by the Full Bench case See notes to s 6, on p 15 above, also notes to s 15, "Over valuation and Under valuation," on p 79 above

The answer is, to Court B The reason is that a transfer of territorial jurisdiction ipso facto effects a transfer of venue (b)

Who may appeal—An appeal under this section may be preferred by any of the following persons —

- 1 Any party to the suit adversely affected by the decree (c), or, if such party is dead, by his legal representative (d) [see s 146]
- 2 Any transferee of the interest of such party, who, so far as such interest is concerned, is bound by the decree, provided his name is entered on the record of the suit (e) [See notes to s 47, "Representative," on p 135 above]
- 3 An auction purchaser may appeal from an order in execution setting aside the sale on the ground of fraud [See notes to s 47, "Appeal," on p 144 above]

No person, unless he is a party to the suit, is entitled to appeal under this section (f)

We have said above that any party to a suit adversely affected by a decree may prefer an appeal from the decree The question whether a party is adversely affected by a decree is a question of fact to be determined in each case according to its particular circumstances It is clear that if a plaintiff's claim is decreed in its entirety and all the issues are found in his favour, the plaintiff cannot appeal from the decree Suppose now that the plaintiff's claim is decreed in its entirety, but that one of the issues is found against the plaintiff, can the plaintiff appeal from the finding adverse to him in such a case? It has been held that he cannot (g) The reason is that the very fact that the decree is entirely in the plaintiff's favour notwithstanding a finding adverse to him on one of the issues shows that such finding was unnecessary to the determination of the plaintiff's suit. We have seen in the notes to s 11, pp 67-63 above, that when a finding on an issue is not necessary to the determination of a suit, such finding does not operate as res judicata, and it is an elementary principle that an appeal is not admissible on any point that does not operate as res judicata. Similarly, if a suit is brought by A against B, and the suit is dismissed in its entirety, B cannot appeal from the decree. And even if one of the issues is found against B, B cannot appeal from the finding, for such finding does not operate as res judicata for the reason stated above (h). See notes to s 11, 'Decision in the former suit must have been necessary to the determination of that suit,' on pp 62 above, and the cases there cited.

It sometimes happens, where there are two or more defendants that although a suit is dismissed as against one of them, in other words the decree on the face of it is entirely in his favour the decree impliedly negatives the right claimed by such defendant as against the plaintiff and the other defendants. In such a case it has been held that an appeal lies at the instance of such defendant on the ground that he is adversely affected by the decree. A owes Rs 2000 to B. A assigns the debt first to B and then to C. C sues A and B to recover the debt, alleging that the assignment to B had become void through non fulfilment of the conditions upon which it was made. A decree is passed against A, but the suit is dismissed as against B. Here the decree necessarily implies the finding that the assignment to B had become void, inasmuch as but for such a finding the decree could not have been passed in favour of C who admittedly was the second assignee of the debt. B may therefore appeal from the decree, though as against him the suit was dismissed (s).

In some cases an appeal may be preferred by a defendant against his co-defendants. A sues two Hindu brothers B and C on a promissory note passed by B for money borrowed by him (B) as manager of the family, alleging that B and C were joint and that the loan was obtained by B for family purposes. B does not appear at the hearing. C appears and admits that he and B are joint but denies that the loan was obtained for family purposes. An issue is raised as to whether the debt contracted by B was for family purposes. It is found by the Court that the loan was obtained by B for family purposes and a decree is passed against B and C. Here C can appeal from the decree as between himself and B. The rule is that when a Court deals with a case as raising not only a question between the plaintiff and the defendants but also as between the defendants one of the defendants can appeal from the decree as between himself and the other defendants (j). See notes to s 11, Res judicata between co-defendants, on p 49 above.

Joinder of appellants—It is irregular for defendants with different decrees to a suit and with different grounds for appeal to join in a single appeal (k).

Sub-section (3) consent decrees not appealable—Sub-section (3) is new. It declares that no decree passed by consent of parties shall be appealable. Under the Code of 1882 consent decrees were passed under s 37a. Under the new Code (f) a consent decree may be passed under O 23 r 3. This rule corresponds to

S. 96. s. 375 of the Code of 1882 except that certain words which occurred at the end of s. 375 have now been omitted. s. 375 runs as follows:—

Compromise of suit

O 23, r 3, is a reproduction of s 375 with the omission of the words italicized above (m). This omission has been supplied by sub section (3) of the present section. The said words barred an appeal from a consent decree only as far as such decree related to so much of the subject matter of the suit as was dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction on which the decree was based. If a consent decree dealt with any matter extraneous to the suit, that is, matters that did not relate to the subject matter of the suit, it was held that the decree, though passed with the consent of parties, was appealable, and that it should be modified by omitting therefrom such terms as did not relate to the subject matter of the suit (n). As regards the terms so excluded it was held that they might be enforced in a separate suit as a contract (o). It would be so also under the present Code. See in this connection the observations of the Judicial Committee in Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zamindars Company (p).

Both under O 23, r 3, and the corresponding s 375 of the Code of 1882 the agreement or compromise in terms of which the Court is invited to pass a consent decree must be 'lawful'. It was accordingly observed by the High Court of Bombay in Gaculas v James Scott (q), a case under s 375, that "notwithstanding the declared finality of the decree, an appeal against it would be maintainable, where the party against whom the decree was passed alleged that there had been in fact no 'lawful agreement' come to, in which case the condition precedent to the making of the decree would not be fulfilled". These observations were mere obiter dicta, but they were adopted by the High Court of Madras in Sridharan v Puramathan (r), where it was held that an appeal would lie from a consent decree if the agreement in terms of which the decree was passed was not lawful. The present Code does not allow an appeal from a consent decree in any case. But it is competent to either party to appeal from the order recording the compromise where the compromise is not a lawful compromise, on the ground that the Court had no power under O 22, r 3, to record a compromise that was not lawful [O 43, r. 1, cl (m)]. See notes to O 22, s 3, "Appeal".

Plaintiffs sued upon an alleged account stated, but the Court found that it was fraudulent and fabricated. Plaintiffs being thus compelled to rely on items of claim contained in the general account, it was found that each of those items was barred by limitation. The defendant nevertheless consented to a decree being passed in the plaintiffs favour for such of the items as were proved, and the trial Court passed a decree upon that basis. It was held that the finding on the question of limitation standing, the decree was a consent decree and the plaintiffs were not entitled to appeal from the decree (s).

Procedure for setting aside consent decrees—Sub section (3), in so far as it bars an appeal from consent decrees, gives effect to the principle that a judgment by consent acts as an estoppel (t). But a consent decree can be set aside on any ground, that would invalidate an agreement, such as misrepresentation, fraud or mistake (u). This, however, cannot be done by an appeal, but it must be done by a fresh suit brought for the purpose (v). In some cases it may be done by an application for a review (w). But it cannot be set aside by a rule (x). See notes to s 11, 'Consent decree and estoppel,' on p 65 above.

"By consent of parties"—To constitute consent there must be an agreement between the parties. Mere acceptance by a party of an order offered by the Court does not amount to consent (y).

97. [New] Where any party aggrieved by a preliminary decree passed after the commencement of this Code does not appeal from such decree, he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree.

Appeal from final decree which no appeal from preliminary decree

Preliminary decree—For definition of preliminary decree, see s 2 (2) above.

Appeal from preliminary decree—This section is new. The object of the section is to estop parties aggrieved by a preliminary decree, who do not appeal from such decree within the period of limitation, from afterwards disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from a decree.

This section enacts that where a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree does not appeal from such decree within the period of limitation he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree. The reason of this enactment is that it is unreasonable that a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree should allow proceedings to be carried on to their final stage and large costs to be incurred and then object to the preliminary decree in an appeal from the final decree. Recent Calcutta decisions under the Code of 1852 were quite the other way. According to these decisions a party aggrieved by an order in the nature of a preliminary decree was not bound to appeal from the order, though the order was appealable as a decree. He was at liberty to wait until the final decree was passed, and then to dispute the correctness of the order in an appeal from the final decree, though the period of limitation for an appeal from the order had then expired. Thus it was held that when an order was passed in a suit for dissolution of partnership and accounts declaring the shares of the parties, and referring the case to a commissioner for taking accounts, it was open to the party aggrieved by the order to dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree, though no appeal was preferred from the order and the period prescribed by the law of limitation for appealing from the order had then expired (). In a subsequent case it was held by a Full Bench of that Court in Ahadem Hossein v. Emdad Hossein (a) (Ma Lean C J, and Rampini, J, dissenting), that where an order was passed in a suit for partition declaring the rights of the parties (b), it was open to the party aggrieved by the order to dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree, though no appeal was preferred from the order within the time allowed by law. The contrary had been laid down in an earlier case decided by the same High Court (c), but that decision was dissented from by a majority of the Full Bench in Ahmed Hossein's case. Under this section omission to prefer an appeal from a preliminary decree precludes objections to it in an appeal from the final decree (d). It is to be noted that the present section applies only to preliminary decrees passed after the commencement of this Code. For preliminary decrees, see O 20 below.

Where preliminary decree not drawn up—A right of appeal under this section only arises when a preliminary decree is 'passed' that is drawn up. It is the duty of the Court, and not of the parties to see that a decree is drawn up. Unless a decree is drawn up, there is no appeal. The provisions of this section do not therefore apply unless the preliminary decree is drawn up (e). See notes to s 33, and notes to s 90, 'Where decree not drawn up' on p 261 above.

Two preliminary decrees—The Code, it seems, contemplates only one preliminary decree (f). The High Court of Calcutta, however, has held that there may in an exceptional case be more than one preliminary decree (g).

Final decree passed prior to or during pendency of appeal from preliminary decree—Under the Code of 1882 it was held that where after the passing of the final decree a party appealed from an order in the nature of a preliminary decree, but did not also appeal from the final decree that circumstance was a bar to the hearing of the appeal from the order in the nature of a preliminary decree (h). Under the present Code it has been held by the High Courts of Madras and Allahabad that the mere fact that no appeal has been preferred from the final decree is no ground for not hearing the appeal from the preliminary decree, whether the latter appeal is filed before or after the final decree. If the preliminary decree is set aside the final decree falls with it (i). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where an appeal has been preferred only from the preliminary decree after the final decree has been passed the appeal is incompetent the reason given being that if the preliminary decree were to be reversed at the instance of the appellant the final decree would still remain unaffected as no appeal was preferred from the final decree. But it has been held by the same Court that the appellate Court may in a proper case allow the appellant to amend the memorandum of appeal so as to turn the appeal against the preliminary decree into one against both the preliminary and final decrees (j).

98. [S. 575] (1) Where an appeal is heard by a Bench of two or more Judges, the appeal shall be decided in accordance with the opinion of such Judges or of the majority (if any) of such Judges.

(2) Where there is no such majority which concurs in a judgment varying or reversing the decree appealed from, such decree shall be confirmed.

Provided that where the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges, and the Judges composing the Bench differ in opinion on a point of law, they may state the point of law upon which they differ, and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only by one or more of the other Judges, and such point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal including those who first heard it.

Difference between the old and new section—This section corresponds with s 575 of the Code of 1882 except that the proviso to sub section (2) of the present section differs in several material respects from the proviso to the second paragraph of s 575. The proviso to the second paragraph of s 575 ran as follows—

“Provided that if the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges, and the Judges composing the bench differ in opinion on a point of law, the appeal may be referred to one or more of the other Judges of the same Court and shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of all the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it.”

As to the points of distinction between the old and the new section, see notes below, ‘The appeal shall then be heard upon that point only,’ and ‘By whom appeal to be heard upon the point of law stated.’

“Differ in opinion on a point of law”—No reference can be made under this section if the Judges differ on a question of fact. The power to refer can only be exercised if there is a difference of opinion on a point of law (1).

“The appeal shall then be heard upon that point only.”—Under the old section it was the appeal that was referred to a third Judge when the Judges hearing the appeal differed in opinion on a point of law and it was held that on such reference the whole appeal was open for argument, and not only the point of law on which the Judges had differed in opinion (2). Under the present section the Judges have to state the point of law upon which they differ, and the appeal is to be heard upon that point only.

By whom appeal to be heard upon the point of law stated—Where a point of law on which the Judges hearing the appeal differ has been stated, the appeal is to be heard upon that point by one or more of the other Judges of the Court. This was, in fact, the practice followed in Bombay under the Code of 1882 (3). In Allahabad the appeal was heard by a Bench including the Judges who first heard it (4). It is to be noted that while the appeal upon the point of law is under this section to be heard by a Judge or Judges other than those who first heard it the point is to be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal including those who first heard it.

Where Judges differ on a point of law, but do not state the point — A obtains a decree in a District Court against B. B appeals to the High Court. The appeal is heard by a Bench of two Judges. The Judges differ in opinion on a point of law, but they do not state the point of law, and deliver judgments as judgments of the Court without any reservation, one Judge holding that the appeal should be allowed with costs, and the other that the appeal should be dismissed with costs. In such a case the Judges are not competent subsequently to state the point of law (o), and their dissentient judgments will operate as confirming the decree of the District Court under para 1 of sub sec (2) (p). But it is competent to B to appeal from the confirming decree under the Letters Patent (q).

Appeal to High Court from awards under Land Acquisition Act.—This section applies to land acquisition appeals by virtue of the provisions of s 54 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (r).

Letters Patent appeal.—Where an appeal is heard by a Bench of two Judges of a Chartered High Court, and the Judges differ, then, if the appeal is from the Original Side of the High Court (that is, an appeal under cl 15 of the Letters Patent), the procedure is governed by cl 36 of the Letters Patent, and the opinion of the senior Judge prevails (s), but if the appeal is from a Subordinate Court, the procedure is governed by the present section (t). See s 4 above and notes to cl 36 of the Letters Patent.

It is clause 36 of the Letters Patent that applies to a reference to the High Court under s 66 of the Income Tax Act, 1922, and not sec 93 of the Code (u).

99. [s. 578.] No decree shall be reversed or substantially varied, nor shall any case be remanded, in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action or any error, defect or irregularity in any proceedings in the suit, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.

No decree to be reversed or modified for error or irregularity not affecting merits or jurisdiction

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with s 578 of the Code of 1882, except in the following respects —

1. The words "any misjoinder of parties or causes of action" are new. As to the effect of these words see notes to O 2, r 3, "Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action," and "Procedure in case of multifariousness," and notes to O 2, r 4, "Leave of the Court."
2. The words, "in any proceedings in the suit," have been substituted for the words, "whether in the decision or in any order passed in the suit or otherwise." As to the effect of this alteration, see notes below, "In any proceeding in the suit."

Scope of the section.—The mere circumstance of there being an error, defect or irregularity in any proceeding in a suit is no ground for reversing or varying a decree

"In any proceedings in the suit."—These words have been substituted for the words, "whether in the decision or in any order passed in the suit or otherwise," which occurred in s. 578 of the Code of 1882. The latter words were held to apply only to irregularities in proceedings subsequent to the institution of the suit, and not to irregularities in the frame or institution of the suit (d). The present section applies to irregularities in any proceedings in the suit.

Irregularity affecting the jurisdiction of the Court.—See s. 21 and notes thereto.

Suits Valuation Act VII of 1887, section 11, modifies the provisions of the present section in cases where an objection is taken in appeal that by reason of the over valuation or under valuation of a suit a Court which had not jurisdiction with respect to the suit exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto. The said section runs as follows —

- (1) Notwithstanding anything in section [99] of the Code of Civil Procedure an objection that by reason of the over valuation or under-valuation of a suit or appeal, a Court of first instance or lower appellate Court which had not jurisdiction with respect to the suit or appeal exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto shall not be entertained by an appellate Court unless—
 - (a) the objection was taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were first framed and recorded, or in the lower appellate Court in the memorandum of appeal to that Court, and
 - (b) the appellate Court is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing that the suit or appeal was over-valued or under-valued, and that the over valuation or under valuation thereof has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits
- (2) If the objection was taken in the manner mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section (1), but the appellate Court is not satisfied as to both the matters mentioned in clause (b) of that sub-section, and has before it the materials necessary for the determination of the other grounds of appeal to itself, it shall dispose of the appeal as if there had been no defect of jurisdiction in the Court of first instance or lower appellate Court
- (3) If the objection was taken in that manner, and the appellate Court is satisfied as to both those matters, and has not those materials before it, it shall proceed to deal with the appeal under the rules applicable to the Court with respect to the hearing of appeal; but if it remands the suit or appeal, or frames and refers issues for trial, or requires additional evidence to be taken, it shall direct its order to a Court competent to entertain the suit or appeal

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES.

100. [s. 584.] (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from every decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to a High Court, on any S. 1 of the following grounds, namely —

Second appeal

- (a) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law ,
- (b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law ,
- (c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits

(2) An appeal may lie under this section from an appellate decree passed ex parte

The word specified in the expression specified law or usage which occurred in cl (a) of s 584 of the repealed Code has been struck out see the undermentioned case (c)

Scope of the section—This section deals with second or special appeals. A second appeal can lie only to the High Court. A Court of first appeal is competent to enter into questions of fact and decide whether the findings of facts by the lower Court are or are not erroneous. But a Court of second appeal is not competent to entertain questions as to the soundness of a finding of fact by the Court below (f). A second appeal can only lie on one or other of the grounds specified in the present section (g). A judge to whom a memorandum of second appeal is presented for admission is entitled to consider whether any of the grounds specified in this section exist and apply to the case and if they do not to reject the appeal summarily (f). The limitations to the power of the Court imposed by ss 100 and 101 in a second appeal ought to be attended to and an appellant ought not to be allowed to question the finding of the first appellate Court upon a matter of fact (i). Nothing can be clearer than the declaration in the Civil Procedure Code that no second appeal will lie except on the grounds specified in section [100]. No Court in India or elsewhere has power to add to or enlarge those grounds (j).

No second appeal lies on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact—There is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be. No doubt a second appeal does lie where there is a substantial error or defect in procedure [see cl (c)] but an erroneous finding of fact is a different thing from an error or defect in procedure. Where there is no error or defect in procedure the finding of the first appellate Court upon a question of fact is final if that Court had before it evidence proper for

S. 100. its consideration in support of the finding (l) : The mere fact that the High Court would have upon the documents and evidence placed before the Court of first appeal come to a different conclusion, is no ground for a second appeal, it is precisely this revision of evidence which is excluded by the limited character of a second appeal. This section was enacted for the express purpose of securing some measure of finality in cases where the balance of evidence, verbal and documentary, arose for decision (l) Hence the High Court is not entitled in second appeal to go behind the findings of fact of the lower appellate Court, which do not result from the misconstruction of a document or the misapplication of law or procedure, but upon the oral evidence in the case (m) Similarly there is no ground for a second appeal upon a question of fact unless it can be shown that the lower appellate court misdirected itself in point of law in dealing with the question upon the evidence (n) In Ramratan Sulul v. Musamat Nandu (o), their Lordships of the Privy Council said : "It has now been conclusively settled that the third Court, which was in this case the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, cannot entertain an appeal upon any question as to the soundness of findings of fact by the second Court, if there is evidence to be considered, the decision of the second Court, however unsatisfactory it might be if examined, must stand final." In another case, that of Nagar Chandra Pal v. Shukur (p), their Lordships said

"Questions of law and of fact are sometimes difficult to disentangle : The proper legal effect of a proved fact is necessarily a question of law, so also is the question of admissibility of evidence and the question of whether any evidence has been offered on one side or the other, but the question whether the fact has been proved, when evidence for and against has been properly admitted, is necessarily a pure question of fact"

Decision being contrary to law.—A second appeal will lie where the decision of the lower appellate Court is contrary to law : The term "law" in cl (a) is not limited in its meaning to statute law, it means general law (q)

When the question is one of a right construction of a document (r), or of a legal inference from a document (s), the question is one of law, and a second appeal will lie. Thus where in a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's proprietary title to the land in suit the lower appellate Court found on a construction of the wajib ul arz and other documentary evidence relating to the land that the plaintiffs were proprietors, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the right construction of the documents was a question of law which the High Court was not precluded from considering in second appeal. In the course of the judgment their Lordships said "That finding (namely, that the plaintiffs were proprietors of the lands) of the Subordinate Judge was the result of his having misconstrued the wajib ul arz. The right construction of documents is a question of law which Judges in second appeal are not by ss 584 and 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now ss 100 and 101) precluded from considering by any finding of the lower appellate Court based upon such documents. The Subordinate Judge arrived at his finding by inference drawn upon an incorrect construction of the wajib ul arz and the Judges in second appeal consequently were not bound by his finding that the plaintiffs were the proprietors of the land" (t). Similarly the question whether a writing which is ostensibly a deed of absolute sale and an agreement by the purchaser to reconvey the property to the vendor constitute an out and out sale and an agreement for reconveyance or a mortgage by conditional sale, is a question of construction of documents, and the High Court is entitled to interfere in second appeal (u). In a recent Privy Council case where the question was whether the possession of properties by a Hindu widow was merely in lieu of maintenance and not adverse to the plaintiffs, their Lordships held that the question was one of inference from documents and not one of fact, and that they were therefore entitled to draw their conclusion notwithstanding the concurrent opinions of the Courts in India (v). But where the question is not one of construction of a document or of legal inference to be drawn from a document, but is one as to the effect to be given to a document as evidence of a fact or facts in issue, a second appeal is not admissible. Thus where a suit involves a question of the fact of adoption, and documents are produced as evidence of the fact of adoption, the question whether the documents do or do not support the alleged adoption is a question of fact, and no second appeal will lie (w). The law on the subject was thus stated by Mookerjee, J., in Mahand Dev v Gopi Nath (x). "We hold accordingly that unless there is a question of the legal effect of a deed which may be treated as a document of title or embodies a contract or is the foundation of the suit, a second appeal does not lie. A second appeal is not admissible merely because some portion of the evidence is in writing of which the meaning has been mistaken by the lower appellate Court."

Where the lower appellate Court arrives at a conclusion which is an inference based upon an erroneous view of the law, the judgment is open to question in second appeal (y). A judgment is also open to question in second appeal where a defect in the judgment is due to an error as to the admissibility of evidence (z), or where secondary evidence is admitted in contravention of the provisions of ss 65 and 66 of the Indian Evidence Act (a). The question of burden of proof is a question of law, and the High Court is entitled to interfere in second appeal if the lower appellate Court has placed the burden on the wrong party (b). A second appeal will also lie where an unregistered document which requires registration is admitted in evidence (c).

Where the Court of first instance grants a mandatory injunction for the demolition of a building, and the decree is reversed in appeal on an erroneous view of the law, a second appeal will lie (d). Though a person may not have been duly appointed executor he may render himself responsible as executor if he intermeddles with the estate of the deceased, misapplication of law on this point is a good ground for a second appeal (e). The question whether a stipulation in a contract is by way of penalty is a question of law which renders a second appeal competent (f).

Where an appeal which ought to have been preferred to the High Court is preferred to a District Court and the latter Court hears and decides the appeal, the decision is contrary to law, and a second appeal will lie from the decree of the District Court (g)

A second appeal will lie to impeach legal conclusions drawn from findings of fact.—Though a second appeal does not lie upon a finding of fact, yet where a legal conclusion is drawn from the finding, a second appeal will lie under cl (a) of the section on the ground that the legal conclusion was erroneous. Thus the question whether possession is adverse or not is often one of simple fact, but it may also be a conclusion of law or a mixed question of law and fact. Where the question is one of simple fact, no second appeal will lie. But a second appeal will lie on the finding of adverse possession when such finding is a mixed question of law and fact depending upon the proper legal conclusion to be drawn from the findings as to simple facts (h). Similarly the question whether a Hindu family is joint or separate is generally a question of fact, but in certain circumstances it may be a mixed question of fact and law and open to reconsideration by the High Court in second appeal (i). Where the question in a suit was whether the defendant was bound by a mortgage executed by his mother, and it was held that he was, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the judgment was substantially one of law, and that it was therefore open to question in second appeal. In the course of their judgment their Lordships said "The facts found (by the lower appellate Court) need not be questioned. It is the soundness of the conclusions from them that is in question and this is a matter of law" (j). As stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in another case, "the proper legal effect of a proved fact is necessarily a question of law," and the High Court is therefore entitled to interfere in second appeal (k). It has thus been held that the question whether a transfer was made with intent to defeat creditors within the meaning of s 53 of the Transfer of Property Act (l), or whether the plaintiff has made out his title to the property in suit (m), or whether a railway company took as much care of the goods delivered to the company as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances take of his own goods within the meaning of ss 151 and 152 of the Contract Act (n), or whether a lumbaradar was guilty of negligence or misconduct (o), or whether the plaintiff is entitled to the easement claimed by him (p), or whether certain property is ancestral or self acquired (q), or whether a decree was obtained by fraud (r), is a question of law, and a second appeal will lie to the High Court. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where from a certain set of facts a Court infers a lost grant, the process is one of inference of fact, and not of legal conclusion, and that it is not a ground for a second appeal (s).

Usage having the force of law.—The words, "usage having the force of law," mean a local or family usage as distinguished from the general law (t)

If the decree appealed from is based on a misconception of the canons which the Privy Council and the High Court have defined as to how a special custom should be proved, the High Court may interfere in second appeal (u). It has been laid down by the Judicial Committee that "questions of the existence of an ancient custom are generally questions of mixed law and fact" (v). The present section precludes the High Court from interfering in second appeal with the findings arrived at by the lower appellate Court on all actual facts from which the existence of the custom has been inferred. But the inference as to the existence and the decision as to the validity of the custom are matters of law, and these may therefore be revised by the High Court in second appeal (w). Similarly where the question is as to the existence of a custom, and the lower appellate Court has acted upon illegal evidence or on evidence legally insufficient to establish the alleged custom (x), or has based its judgment on irrelevant matters (y), or has proceeded upon a wrong construction of a document (z), the error is one of law, and the High Court is entitled to interfere in second appeal. As to certificates under s 41 (3) of the Punjab Court Act VI of 1918, in cases of custom, see the undermentioned cases (a).

Clause (c): substantial error or defect in procedure—

No evidence to go to a jury—Case not raised by parties—Misconception of evidence—Evidence misread or misunderstood—Overlooking material evidence—Irrelevant matters— A second appeal will lie where there is, as an English lawyer would express it, no evidence to go to the jury, because that does not raise a question of fact such as arises upon the issue itself, but a question of law for the consideration of the judge (b). Thus where the lower appellate Court found that a deed of compromise was not for the benefit of a certain infant, and there was no evidence in the case upon which that Court could found its judgment, it was held by the Judicial Committee that the case was one of a substantial error or defect in the procedure of the first appellate Court and that it was a ground for a second appeal to the High Court (c). Similarly where the lower appellate Court disposes of a suit upon a case not raised by the parties and to which the evidence has not been directed, it is a substantial error or defect in procedure within the meaning of this section, and a second appeal lies to the High Court (d). A second appeal will also lie where the finding of the lower appellate Court is based on a misconception of what the evidence is (e), or on evidence which has been misread or misunderstood (f) or the lower appellate Court has misdirected itself in point of law in dealing with the

See D. Hoff v. B. (1887) 12 P. 111; D. v. G. (1890) 15 P. 111; D. v. G. (1890) 15 P. 111.

S. 100. question upon the evidence (g), or has overlooked or ignored material documentary evidence (h) On the same principle a second appeal will lie where the finding of the lower appellate Court, e g, a finding on the existence of a usage, is based on irrelevant matters (i)

If here the Courts below have misconceived the real question they had to try—The High Court has jurisdiction under this section to set aside the decree of the trial Judge in favour of the plaintiff, affirmed on the facts by the first appellate Judge, on the ground that the evidence taken showed that the true question of fact which had not been considered and as to which no issue had been framed should have been answered in favour of the defendant (j)

Other cases of error or defect in procedure—Omitting to decide a material issue (l), omitting to examine witnesses tendered (l), refusing to receive documentary evidence which ought to have been accepted (m), allowing the plaintiff in the lower appellate Court to change the nature of his suit (n), deciding an appeal without waiting for the return of a commission directed to be issued by the first appellate Court (o), have all been held to be good grounds for special appeal But disregard of an Amin's second report as to a boundary line does not constitute a substantial error or defect of procedure within the meaning of this section, and is no ground for second appeal (p) The refusal by a lower appellate Court to exercise the discretion vested in it by O 41, r. 27, with respect to the admission of additional evidence, is a substantial error or defect in procedure, and affords a ground of special appeal But where the Court has exercised its discretion in a sound and reasonable way, and in the exercise of its discretion refused to admit additional evidence, the case is not one of substantial error or defect in procedure (q) Admission by the lower appellate Court of additional evidence tendered by the respondent without the consent of the appellant and without recording the reasons for its admission as required by O 41, r. 27, is a substantial error in procedure, and is a good ground for second appeal (r)

Refusal by Court of first appeal to extend time for filing an appeal.—Where an application is made to a Court of first appeal to admit an appeal from the original decree after the expiration of the period of limitation, that Court has the power, on sufficient cause being shown to admit the appeal [Limitation Act, s. 5] If the lower appellate Court refuses to admit the appeal, holding in the exercise of its discretion that there was no sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed time, there is no ground for a second appeal The principle is that where a Court has exercised its discretion in a sound and reasonable way, the High Court has no power to interfere in second appeal But if the lower appellate Court does not exercise its discretion at all, or exercises it capriciously and arbitrarily, or without proper legal material to support its decision, a second appeal will lie under cl. (a) of the section (s)

Dismissal of appeal for default.—Though a second appeal may be from an appellate decree passed ex parte, no second appeal lies from an order dismissing an appeal for default Such an order is not a decree (t), see O 41, r. 11 (2), and s. 2, cl. (2), sub cl. (b)

New case in second appeal—An appellant should not be allowed to set up a new case in second appeal (u), nor should he be allowed to raise a new issue not supported by the evidence on the record (v) See notes below

Pleas which may be taken for the first time in special appeal.—An appellant will not be allowed to set up for the first time in second appeal a plea not taken by him in the lower Court. But if the objection is one which goes to the very root of the case, it may be allowed to be taken for the first time in second appeal (u). Thus an objection to jurisdiction may be taken for the first time in special appeal, if it is patent on the face of the record (x), except, it is submitted, in those cases which fall within s 21 above. Similarly, the plea of res judicata may be taken for the first time in second appeal, provided it can be decided upon the record before the Court (y). So also the plea of want of notice in an ejectment suit (z). As to the plea of limitation, see notes to O 41, r 2, "Leave of Court Limitation," which refer to first appeals apply also to second appeals (a).

The High Court will entertain in second appeal a point of law although it has not been raised in any of the lower Courts, provided the point of law arises on the findings of the lower Court or on the issues as framed and on the evidence already recorded. Thus where the lower appellate Court awarded to the plaintiff a third share of the property in suit on the ground that remoter gotraj sapindas inherited per stirpes and the defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to any share at all, the defendant was allowed to contend at the hearing of the second appeal that the plaintiff was not entitled in any event to more than a sixth share as remoter gotraj sapindas inherited per capita and not per stirpes (b). But the High Court will not entertain a point of law raised for the first time in second appeal, if the point cannot be decided without remanding the case for further evidence (c). Nor can a point of law be taken for the first time in second appeal if it sets up a new right differing in kind from that asserted throughout the trial, and not merely in degree as in the above case. Thus where the right claimed by one of the defendants was treated as one of maintenance only in the Courts below, she was not allowed to contend in second appeal that, besides maintenance, she was entitled to a half share in the property (d).

103. for the disposal of the appeal which has not been determined by the lower appellate Court or which has been wrongly determined by such Court by reason of any illegality, omission, error or defect such as is referred to in sub-section (1) of section 100.

Changes in the section.—The words italicized above were substituted by Act 6 of 1926 for the words “but not determined by the lower appellate Court” which occurred after the words “of the appeal”

Scope of the section.—This section is new. It was further altered by Act 6 of 1926 as stated above. The section as it now stands empowers the High Court in second appeal to determine issues of fact (1) where such issues have not been determined by the lower appellate Court or (2) where they have been wrongly determined by that Court, provided the evidence on the record is sufficient to enable the High Court to determine such issues. If the evidence on the record is not sufficient, the proper course is to refer the issues for trial under O 41, r 25.

In the absence of any provision such as is contained in the present section, there was a conflict of decisions under the Code of 1882 as to the power of the High Court to determine in second appeal issues of fact which had not been determined by the lower appellate Court. On the one hand, it was held that where the evidence on the record was sufficient to enable the High Court to deliver judgment, the High Court had the power at the hearing of a second appeal itself to fix and determine issues of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal but not determined by the lower appellate Court, as a remand in such a case would merely cause delay and increase costs (u). On the other hand, it was held that even if the evidence on the record was sufficient the High Court had no such power, and the only course open to it was to remand the issues for a finding to the lower appellate Court the ground of the decisions being that the High Court had no power in second appeal to determine any issue of fact (v). The present section gives effect to the former view. It has been held under this section that where the High Court has framed issues and referred the same for trial to the lower Court under O 41, r 25, and the findings of the lower Court on those issues are incomplete, the High Court has power under this section to determine those issues if there are materials on which the High Court can come to a conclusion (v).

Under the section as it stood before it was amended by Act 6 of 1926, it was held that where a question of fact had been determined by the lower appellate Court, but the decision could not be supported because it was based in part on evidence improperly admitted, the High Court could not look at the evidence to decide whether the remaining evidence, after exclusion of evidence erroneously admitted, was sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below, and the proper course, it was held, was to remand the case to the lower Court (x). This resulted in unnecessary remands and the section has now been amended to enable the High Court itself in second appeal to come to the necessary finding of fact in all cases where the finding of the lower appellate Court is vitiated by an error or illegality such as is described in s 100 (1). Since the amendment the High Court may itself determine the necessary issues of fact without remanding the case to the lower Court in cases such as the above

Suits of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes.—Whether a suit is or is not of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes is to be determined by a reference to the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1887 [see = 15, 16 and 27]. If a suit is of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court, and the value of the subject matter of the suit does not exceed Rs 500, no second appeal will lie, even though for special reasons the suit cannot be or has not been tried in a Small Cause Court, or though the Small Cause Court to which the plaint was presented returns the plaint under s 23 of the said Act to be presented to another Court on the ground that it involves a question of title, and is not therefore cognizable by that Court. The reason is that it is the nature of the suit, and not the Court in which it is tried, that determines the right of appeal (e). The words “any suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes” mean any suit relating to a subject matter over which a Court of Small Causes would have jurisdiction if the claim were within the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction (f). In determining whether a second appeal lies under this section, the original character of the suit is to be regarded rather than the character it may subsequently assume by operation of the findings of the Court (g). Nor should regard be had to the mode of trial of the suit, thus a suit which is of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes is none the less so because instead of being tried under the summary procedure it has been tried in the ordinary manner (h). In applying this section it does not make any difference that the decree sought to be appealed from was passed by the lower appellate Court in review (i).

Suit for mesne profits—Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act gives jurisdiction to Courts of Small Causes to take cognizance of all suits of a civil nature of which the value does not exceed Rs 500 except such suits as are specified in the second schedule of the Act. That schedule consists of several articles of which article 31 is the most important for the purposes of the present section. That article excludes from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts “any other suit for an account including . . . a suit for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant.” This article contemplates cases in which the plaintiff claims an account of monies which the defendant has received and to an account of which the plaintiff is entitled, because the monies received belonged to him. It has been held by a majority of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that a suit for mesne profits does not fall under this article, in other words it is cognizable by a Small Cause Court. Such a suit is not a suit “for the profits of immoveable properties belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant.” A suit for mesne profits is a suit for damages in which the defendant would be liable even if no profits have been actually received by him during the period of dispossession. For it will be seen, on referring to s 2, sub s (12), of the Code, that mesne profits are defined as profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom (j). On the other hand, it has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (k), that a suit for mesne profits does come within art. 31 of the said Act, and is therefore not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. As regards recent Bombay decisions, if we are to reconcile them all, we may say that a suit for mesne profits is, according to the Bombay Court, a “suit

Suit for rent.—The High Courts of Madras and Rangoon have held that a suit for rent is a suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes (m2). The High Court of Calcutta has held that it is not (m3).

Suit for title—A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for title relating to immoveable property. A suit, however, which is otherwise cognizable by a Small Cause Court, does not cease to be so because it incidentally involves a question of title (n).

Suit for a declaration—A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for a declaratory decree. The mere fact, however, that there is a prayer for a declaration will not prevent a suit from being of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court if the other reliefs claimed in the suit could be obtained without asking for a declaration (a)

Execution.—The expression "suit" in this section includes execution proceedings (p), from which it follows that if a suit is of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court, no second appeal will lie from an order made in execution of the decree passed in the suit, unless the value of the suit exceeds Rs 500. It is immaterial that the order in execution is made by a Court other than a Court of Small Causes or a Court vested with the powers of a Small Cause Court as where the property attached in execution of the decree is immovable property and the order in execution is made by a First Class Subordinate Judge in his ordinary jurisdiction. The test is what was the nature of the suit in which the decree sought to be executed was passed and not the nature of the proceedings in execution (q). It is also immaterial that the amount sought to be recovered in execution exceeds Rs 500. The test is not the amount claimed in execution proceedings but the amount of the subject matter of the suit (r). An order of remand made by an appellate Court in an appeal from an order of the Court executing a decree in a suit of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court is also not appealable (s).

Where the plaintiff decree holder applied under O 21 r 71 to recover Rs. 300 being the deficiency of price from a defaulting purchaser and both the lower Courts disallowed the plaintiff's claim it was held that no second appeal lay to the High Court, the reason given being that but for the provisions of r 71, a suit would have to be filed for that amount in which case it would have been a Small Cause Court suit, and the application therefore must be treated as one made in execution of a Small Cause Court decree (1).

Sec. 103. for the disposal of the appeal which has not been determined by the lower appellate Court or which has been wrongly determined by such Court by reason of any illegality, omission, error or defect such as is referred to in sub-section (1) of section 100.

Changes in the section.—The words italicized above were substituted by Act 6 of 1926 for the words “but not determined by the lower appellate Court” which occurred after the words “of the appeal”

Scope of the section.—This section is new. It was further altered by Act 6 of 1926 as stated above. The section as it now stands empowers the High Court in second appeal to determine issues of fact (1) where such issues have not been determined by the lower appellate Court or (2) where they have been wrongly determined by that Court, provided the evidence on the record is sufficient to enable the High Court to determine such issues. If the evidence on the record is not sufficient, the proper course is to refer the issues for trial under O 41, r 25.

In the absence of any provision such as is contained in the present section, there was a conflict of decisions under the Code of 1882 as to the power of the High Court to determine in second appeal issues of fact which had not been determined by the lower appellate Court. On the one hand, it was held that where the evidence on the record was sufficient to enable the High Court to deliver judgment, the High Court had the power at the hearing of a second appeal itself to fix and determine issues of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal but not determined by the lower appellate Court as a remand in such a case would merely cause delay and increase costs (u). On the other hand, it was held that even if the evidence on the record was sufficient the High Court had no such power, and the only course open to it was to remand the issues for a finding to the lower appellate Court, the ground of the decisions being that the High Court had no power in second appeal to determine any issue of fact (v). The present section gives effect to the former view. It has been held under this section that where the High Court has framed issues and referred the same for trial to the lower Court under O 41, r 25, and the findings of the lower Court on those issues are incomplete, the High Court has power under this section to determine those issues if there are materials on which the High Court can come to a conclusion (w).

Under the section as it stood before it was amended by Act 6 of 1926, it was held that where a question of fact had been determined by the lower appellate Court, but the decision could not be supported because it was based in part on evidence improperly admitted, the High Court could not look at the evidence to decide whether the remaining evidence, after exclusion of evidence erroneously admitted, was sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below, and the proper course, it was held, was to remand the case to the lower Court (x). This resulted in unnecessary remands and the section

ment the High Court may itself determine the necessary issues of fact without remanding the case to the lower Court in cases such as the above

Scope of the section—An interlocutory order made in a suit is either appealable (s 104) or not appealable. This section like the corresponding s 591, applies to any order, that is, to appealable as well as non appealable orders. Where an interlocutory order is appealable, the party against whom the order is made is not bound to prefer an appeal against it, but he may make the irregularity in the order a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal, where an appeal is preferred from the decree in the suit in which the order was made. In other words, s 105 allows an appealable order which has not been appealed from to be made the subject of appeal in an appeal from the decree. There is no law prevailing in India which renders it imperative upon a party to appeal from every interlocutory order by which he may conceive himself aggrieved, under the penalty, if he does not do so of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the appellate Court. Nothing would be more detrimental to the expeditious administration of justice than the establishment of a rule which would impose upon a party the necessity of appealing, whereby on the one hand he might be harassed with endless expense and delay, and on the other inflict upon his opponent similar calamities. It was so observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moheshur Singh v The Bengal Government (j) and in subsequent cases (k), and it is this principle that underlies the present section. The present section makes it quite clear that an order appealable under s 104 may be questioned under s 105 in an appeal from the decree in the suit, although no appeal from the order has been preferred under s 104 (l). And even where the interlocutory order is one from which no appeal lies, an error, defect or irregularity in that order may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal, where an appeal is preferred from the decree in the suit in which the order was made (m).

"Affecting the decision of the case"—It may now be taken as established that the words "affecting the decision of the case" mean affecting the decision of the case on its merits. It has accordingly been held that an order cannot be attacked in appeal from a final decree, unless the error, defect or irregularity in the order is one affecting the decision of the case on the merits (n). It has thus been held by the High Courts of Allahabad, Calcutta and Lahore that an order under O 9, r 13, setting aside an ex parte decree, is not an order that affects the merits of the case, such an order merely ensures a hearing upon the merits. Hence the alleged wrongfulness of the order cannot be urged as a ground of objection in an appeal from the decree in the suit (o). But the High Court of Madras has held that such an order may be attacked in appeal from the final decree (p). In that case, however, the ex parte decree was set aside as to one of two defendants who had not applied to set it aside, and it was held that the order setting aside the ex parte decree as against that defendant may be attacked in an appeal from the final decree. This decision was approved by the same High Court in a later case where also the facts were peculiar. The point of the decision in that case was that an order under O 9, r 13 may be challenged in an appeal from the final decree in the peculiar circumstances of a case (q).

APPEALS FROM ORDERS

104 [S 538] (1) An appeal shall lie from the following orders, and save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in force, from no other orders —

- (a) an order superseding an arbitration where the award has not been completed within the period allowed by the Court,
- (b) an order on an award stated in the form of a special case,
- (c) an order modifying or correcting an award;
- (d) an order filing or refusing to file an agreement to refer to arbitration,
- (e) an order staying or refusing to stay a suit where there is an agreement to refer to arbitration;
- (f) an order filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court,
- (ff) an order under section 35-A,
- (g) an order under section 93,
- (h) an order under any of the provisions of this Code imposing a fine or directing the arrest or detention in the civil prison of any person except where such arrest or detention is in execution of a decree;
- (i) any order made under rules from which an appeal is expressly allowed by rules

Provided that no appeal shall lie against any order specified in clause (ff) save on the ground that no order, or an order for the payment of a less amount, ought to have been made

(2) No appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal under this section

Appealable orders—This section and O 43, r 1, contain a full list of appealable orders. The words, 'save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in force,' are new. See notes below under the head 'Letters Patent appeal'

Clause (a)—See Schedule II, paragraph (8) and notes thereto

Clause (b)—See Schedule II, paragraph (11) and notes thereto

Clause (c)—See Schedule II, paragraph (12) and notes thereto

Clause (d)—See Schedule II, paragraph (17) and notes thereto

Clause (e)—See Schedule II, paragraph (18)

Clause (f)—See Schedule II, paragraph (21), and notes thereto. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that this clause does not apply to proceedings under cl (2) of s 11 of the Arbitration Act, 1899, and that no appeal therefore lies under this clause from an order refusing to set aside an award made and filed under that Act but the High Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal under cl 15 of the Letters Patent (y) In Calcutta the practice is for the Registrar to file the award The party dissatisfied with the award may then apply to have it set aside In Allahabad the practice is to apply to the Court for an order to file the award Hence it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that if the District Judge refuses to file the award, an appeal lies to the High Court under cl (f) from the order refusing to file the award (z)

Clause (ff)—This clause was inserted in the section by Act II of 1922

Clause (h)—An appeal lies from an order of arrest or attachment before judgment (a)

Clause (h)—See O 16, rr 10, 12, 17 and 21 (summoning and attendance of witnesses), O 26, r 17 (attendance and examination of witnesses before Commissioner), O 38, r 4 (arrest before judgment), O 39 r 2, sub r (3) (disobedience of injunction)

Clause (i)—See O 43, r 1

Proviso—The proviso was inserted in the section by Act 9 of 1922

Sub-section (2)—Thus if an appeal is preferred under O 43, r 1 (a), from an order under O 7, r 10, returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court, and an order is made in appeal remanding the case under O 41, r 23, no appeal lies from such order (b) This sub section, however, does not take away the right of appeal conferred by c' 15 of the Letters Patent (b2) The High Court of Allahabad is the only Court that has held that it does (b3) See notes below, "Letters Patent Appeal." See also notes to O 41, r 23, "Appeal"

Section 154—There are some orders which were appealable under sec 588 of the repealed Code, which are not appealable under this section As to these it is provided by s 154 that where the right to appeal has already accrued to a party before the commencement of this Code, such right shall not be affected by anything contained in this Code

Letters Patent appeal—Clause 15 of the Letters Patent provides that an appeal will lie from every "judgment" of a single Judge of the High Court in the exercise of civil jurisdiction to other Judges of the Court Now an order refusing to set aside an award is a "judgment" within the meaning of the said clause (c) It is clear that if such an order is made by a Munsif's Court, or by the Court of a Subordinate Judge, or by a District Court, no appeal will lie from it, for it is not an order specified in the present section It is equally clear that if such an order is made by a Judge of the High Court, an appeal will lie from it under the Letters Patent, for the present section expressly saves the right of appeal given by any law for the time being in force Upon this point there was a conflict of decisions under the Code of 1832 The conflict arose from the provision contained in s 588 of that Code that an appeal lay from orders specified in that section, and from no other orders [see sub sec (2) of the present section] The question accordingly arose whether s 588, by declaring that no appeal would lie from any order other than those specified in that section, took away the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent It was held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, following a decision of the Privy Council (d), that s 588 did not take away the right of appeal given by cl 15 of the Letters Patent (e), and that an appeal therefore lay from an order of a single Judge of the High Court refusing to set aside an award to the other Judges of the Court. On the other hand it was held by the Allahabad High Court, on a different reading of the Privy Council case referred to above that s 588 took away the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent (f) and that no appeal therefore lay from an order refusing to set aside an award though the order might be made by a Judge of the High Court. It is submitted that the words 'save as otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force' include the Letters Patent and that they were added into the present section to give effect to the Calcutta Madras and Bombay decisions. This is the view taken by the High Court of Lahore (ff). The High Court of Allahabad however has adhered to its previous view in cases under the present Code (fff).

Privy Council appeal—The provision in sub sec (2) deals with internal appeals within the limits of British India. It does not take away the general right of appealing to the Crown given by s 109. A applies to the District Judge of East Berar under Sch II para 20 to file an award in Court. B opposes the application. The District Judge makes an order refusing to file the award. A appeals from the order [see cl (f)] to the Judicial Commissioner. The Judicial Commissioner makes an order filing the award. B appeals to the King in Council from the order of the Judicial Commissioner. Does the appeal lie to the King in Council? Yes for though no second appeal lies to the High Court by reason of the provision in sub sec (2) an appeal does lie to the King in Council under s 109 of the Code (g). Similarly though no second appeal lies from an order passed on appeal from the order specified in O 43 cl (j) an appeal lies to the King in Council under s 109 of the Code (h).

105 [S 591] (1) Save as otherwise expressly provided, no appeal shall lie from any order made by a Court in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction, but, where a decree is appealed from, any error, defect or irregularity in any order, affecting the decision of the case, may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal.

Other orders

(1), where any party aggrieved by an order of remand made after the commencement of this Code from which an appeal lies does not appeal therefrom, he shall thereafter be precluded from disputing its correctness.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub section (1), where any party aggrieved by an order of remand made after the commencement of this Code from which an appeal lies does not appeal therefrom, he shall thereafter be precluded from disputing its correctness.

Changes introduced by the section—This section corresponds with s 591 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars—

- 1 Sub section (2) is new. See notes below. Sub section (2) appeal from order of remand.
- 2 S 591 contained the words 'in any such order' after the word 'irregularity'. The word 'such' has been omitted as the expression 'such order' gave rise to the contention in some cases before the Privy Council that s 591 applied to non appealable orders only a contention that was overruled by the Privy Council (i).

Privy Council appeal.—The provision in sub sec (2) deals with internal appeals within the limits of British India. It does not take away the general right of appealing to the Crown given by s 109. A applies to the District Judge of East Berar under Sch II, para 20, to file an award in Court. B opposes the application. The District Judge makes an order refusing to file the award. Yes, for though no second appeal lies to the High Court by reason of the provision in sub sec (2), an appeal does lie to the King in Council under s 109 of the Code (g). Similarly though no second appeal lies from an order passed on appeal from the order specified in O 43, cl. (j), an appeal lies to the King in Council under s 109 of the Code (h).

Scope of the section—An interlocutory order made in a suit is either appealable (s 104) or not appealable. This section, like the corresponding s 531, applies to any order, that is to appealable as well as non appealable orders. Where an interlocutory order is appealable, the party against whom the order is made is not bound to prefer an appeal against it, but he may make the irregularity in the order a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal, where an appeal is preferred from the decree in the suit in which the order was made. In other words, s 105 allows an appealable order which has not been appealed from to be made the subject of appeal in an appeal from the decree. There is no law prevailing in India which renders it imperative upon a party to appeal from every interlocutory order by which he may conceive himself aggrieved, under the penalty, if he does not do so, of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the appellate Court. Nothing would be more detrimental to the expeditious administration of justice than the establishment of a rule which would impose upon a party the necessity of appealing, whereby on the one hand he might be harassed with endless expense and delay, and on the other inflict upon his opponent similar calamities. It was so observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moheshur Singh v The Bengal Government (j) and in subsequent cases (k), and it is this principle that underlies the present section. The present section makes it quite clear that an order appealable under s 104 may be questioned under s 105 in an appeal from the decree in the suit, although no appeal from the order has been preferred under s 104 (l). And even where the interlocutory order is one from which no appeal lies, an error, defect or irregularity in that order may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal, where an appeal is preferred from the decree in the suit in which the order was made (m).

'Affecting the decision of the case'—It may now be taken as established that the words "affecting the decision of the case" mean affecting the decision of the case on its merits. It has accordingly been held that an order cannot be attacked in appeal from a final decree, unless the error, defect or irregularity in the order is one affecting the decision of the case on the merits (n). It has thus been held by the High Courts of Allahabad, Calcutta and Lahore that an order under O 9, r 13, setting aside an ex parte decree, is not an order that affects the merits of the case, such an order merely ensures a hearing upon the merits. Hence the alleged wrongfulness of the order cannot be urged as a ground of objection in an appeal from the decree in the suit (o). But the High Court of Madras has held that such an order may be attacked in appeal from the final decree (p). In that case, however, the ex parte decree was set aside as to one of two defendants who had not applied to set it aside, and it was held that the order setting aside the ex parte decree as against that defendant may be attacked in an appeal from the final decree. This decision was approved by the same High Court in a later case where also the facts were peculiar. The point of the decision in that case was that an order under O 9, r 13 may be challenged in an appeal from the final decree in the peculiar circumstances of a case (q).

An order under O 41, r 19, re-admitting an appeal which has been dismissed for default is not one which affects the decision of the case on the merits, and it cannot therefore be attacked in an appeal from the final decree (r)

It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras, and Allahabad, that an order setting aside an award and directing the case to be tried by the Court may be attacked in appeal from the final decree (s), the reason given in the Allahabad case being that such an order affects the decision of the case on the merits (t). The High Court of Lahore has taken a different view (u), but the attention of the Court was not drawn to the decisions of the other High Courts.

An order setting aside an abatement under O 22, r 9, does not affect the decision of the case on the merits. Rather, it re-opens the hearing of the case on the merits, and it cannot therefore be challenged in appeal from the final decree (v). But there is a difference of opinion whether an order setting aside an abatement may be so attacked if it is made simultaneously with the final decree in the suit. It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that it may be so attacked if passed simultaneously with the final decree (w). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta, that an order setting aside an abatement cannot be challenged in an appeal from the final decree, whether it is passed before or simultaneously with the final decree (x).

An order refusing leave under s 20 (b) cannot be attacked in an appeal from an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court (y).

"Error, defect or irregularity."—The error, defect or irregularity referred to in this section must be an error, defect or irregularity in law or procedure, and not in matters of fact (z).

Application of the section.—This section contemplates two things, namely, (1) a regular appeal from a decree, and (2) the insertion in that appeal of a ground of objection relating to an interlocutory order. Hence it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that no appeal will lie where the appeal is ostensibly against the decree passed in the suit, but the grounds of appeal are solely directed against an interlocutory order made in the suit (a). On the other hand, it has been held by the other High Courts that an appeal will lie, though the only reason for the appeal is the erroneous decision in regard to an interlocutory order (b).

It should be noted that in order to take advantage of the provisions of this section, the ground of objection must be set out in the memorandum of appeal (c).

Sub-section (2): appeal from order of remand.—An order under O 41, r 23, remanding a case, is appealable, where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court [O 43, r 1, cl (u)]. Such an order was also appealable under the Code of 1882 [see s 588, cl (28)]. Under s 591 of the Code of 1882, it was held that a party aggrieved by an order of remand could object to its validity in an appeal against the final decree, though he might have appealed against the order under s 588.

109. ■ 109 and 110. Therefore, though there is no express provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907) for appeal to the Privy Council from orders of the High Court made under that Act, an appeal to the Privy Council is competent, if the case comes under ss 109 and 110 of the Code (l)

■ Decree—For definition of decree, see s 2 (2) above. An act of State is not a decree. Hence no appeal lies to the King in Council from an order of the Viceroy and Governor General of India in Council deposing the Maharajah of a Native State in India such an order being an act of State (l)

■ Preliminary Decree—An appeal lies to the King in Council from a preliminary decree, e.g., a decree declaring the liability of a party and directing accounts to be taken (m)

■ Final order—A final order within the meaning of clauses (a) and (b) of the section is an order which finally decides any matter which is directly at issue in the case in respect to the rights of the parties. An order comprising the decision of a High Court upon a cardinal issue in a suit, that issue being one that goes to the foundation of the suit, and one that can never, while the decision stands, be questioned again in the suit, is final within the meaning of this section, notwithstanding that there may be subordinate inquiries to make (n). The expression "final" is used in contradiction to "interlocutory" (o). To determine whether an order is final or not, it is necessary in each case to ascertain the nature of the proceedings (p).

In Rahimboy v Turner (q), which is the leading case on the subject, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that where an order directing the taking of accounts which the defendant contends ought not to be taken at all, decides in effect that if the result should be found to be against the defendant, he is liable to pay the amount, the order is final within the meaning of this section. In the course of the judgment their Lordships said: "Now that question of liability was the sole question in dispute at the hearing of the cause, and it is the cardinal point in the suit. The arithmetical result is only a consequence of the liability. The real question in issue was the liability, and that has been determined by this decree against the defendant in such a way that in this suit it is final. The Court can never go back upon this decree so as to say that, though the result of the account may be against the defendant, still the defendant is not liable to pay anything. That is finally determined against him, and therefore in their Lordships' view the decree is a final one within the meaning of section 595 of the Code." But an order refusing to appoint a receiver in a suit is not a final order, and no appeal lies from it to the Privy Council (r). Similarly an order made in revision under s 115 of the Code deciding that the applicant should be allowed to sue in forma pauperis is not a final order (s). An order of the High Court directing the lower Court to proceed with the execution of a decree which the lower Court had refused to execute on the ground that it had no jurisdiction is not a final order (t). An order refusing an application to be brought on the record as the legal representative of a deceased party to a pending appeal is not a final, but an interlocutory order (u). But where after a preliminary decree had been passed in a suit for partition declaring that the plaintiff was entitled to a one fourth share in the joint properties, the lower Court dismissed

An order under O 41, r 19, re admitting an appeal which has been dismissed for default is not one which affects the decision of the case on the merits, and it cannot therefore be attacked in an appeal from the final decree (r)

It has been held that an order setting aside an abatement attacked in appeal being that such an Court of Lahore has drawn to the decisions of the other High Courts

An order setting aside an abatement under O 22, r 9, does not affect the decision of the case on the merits. Rather, it re opens the hearing of the case on the merits, and it cannot therefore be challenged in appeal from the final decree (s). But there is a difference of opinion whether an order setting aside an abatement may be so attacked if it is made simultaneously with the final decree in the suit. It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that it may be so attacked if passed simultaneously with the final decree (w). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta, that an order setting aside an abatement cannot be challenged in an appeal from the final decree, whether it is passed before or simultaneously with the final decree (x).

An order refusing leave under s 20 (b) cannot be attacked in an appeal from an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court (y).

"Error, defect or irregularity"—The error, defect or irregularity referred to in this section must be an error, defect or irregularity in law or procedure, and not in matters of fact (z).

Application of the section—This section contemplates two things, namely, (1) a regular appeal from a decree, and (2) the insertion in that appeal of a ground of objection relating to an interlocutory order. Hence it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that no appeal will lie where the appeal is ostensibly against the decree passed in the suit, but the grounds of appeal are solely directed against an interlocutory order made in the suit (a). On the other hand, it has been held by the other High Courts that an appeal will lie, though the only reason for the appeal is the erroneous decision in regard to an interlocutory order (b).

It should be noted that in order to take advantage of the provisions of this section, the ground of objection must be set out in the memorandum of appeal (c).

Sub-section (2): appeal from order of remand.—An order under O 41, r 23, remanding a case, is appealable, where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court [O 43, r 1, cl (u)]. Such an order was also appealable under the Code of 1882 [see s 588, cl (23)]. Under s 591 of the Code of 1882, it was held that a party aggrieved by an order of remand could object to its validity in an appeal against the final decree, though he might have appealed against the order under s. 594

GENERAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO APPEALS

107. [S 582] (1) Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, an Appellate Court shall have power—

Powers of Appellate Court

- (a) to determine a case finally,
- (b) to remand a case,
- (c) to frame issues and refer them for trial,
- (d) to take additional evidence or to require such evidence to be taken

(2) Subject as aforesaid, the Appellate Court shall have the same powers and shall perform as nearly as may be the same duties as are conferred and imposed by this Code on Courts of original jurisdiction in respect of suits instituted therein

Prescribed — 'Prescribed' means prescribed by the Rules contained in the First Schedule or made under s 122 or s 125 of the Code see s III clis (16) and (18)

Sub-section (1)—Sub section (1) is new. Note that the powers of the appellate Court referred to in clis (a) to (d) are limited by the Rules as is shown by the opening words of the section (g)

Clause (a)—See O 41, r 24

Clause (b)—See B 41 r 23

Clause (c)—See O 41, r 25

Clause (d)—See O 41, rr 27, 28

Sub-section (2)—This sub section corresponds to s 582 of the Code of 1882 The Appellate Court has power under this section to add persons as parties to a suit (h) or appeal (i) also to give leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit under B 23 s 1 (j)

APPEALS TO THE KING IN COUNCIL

109 [S 593] Subject to such rules as may, from time to time, be made by His Majesty in Council regarding appeals from the Courts of British India, and to the provisions hereinafter contained, an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council—

- (a) from any decree or final order passed on appeal by a High Court or by any other Court of final appellate jurisdiction,
- (b) from any decree or final order passed by a High Court in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction, and
- (c) from any decree or order, when the case, as hereinafter provided, is certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council

Ss 109 and 110 are to be read together. See also cl 39 of the Letters Patent For rules of procedure in appeals to the King in Council see O 45 below

Difference between the old and the new section—This section corresponds with s 593 of the Code of 1882 except that in cls (a) and (b) the words 'decree or final order' have been substituted for the words 'final decree' and in cl (c) the words 'or order' have been added after the word 'decree'. This, however, does not introduce any change in the law. The Code of 1882 contained a section, being section 594 which ran thus: 'In this chapter (that is chapter XLV) unless there be some thing repugnant in the subject or context the expression 'decree' includes also judgment and order.' Chapter XLV of the Code of 1882 relating to appeals to His Majesty in Council has been split into two parts in this Code ss 593-596-597 and 616 being retained in the body of the Code [now ss 109-112] and the remaining sections being relegated to O 40. S 593 has been reproduced with slight alterations in O 45 r 1. But it is not reproduced in this part of the Code as four only out of the twenty three sections of that chapter are retained in the body of the Code. What has been done instead is that the words 'decree or final order' have been substituted where the words 'final decree' occurred in the four old sections and the words 'decree or order' have been substituted where the word 'decree' occurred in the other sections.

Right of appeal to the Privy Council—Appeal in cases under the Provincial Insolvency Act—The right of appeal from the High Courts to the Privy Council on cl 39 of the Letters Patent and this is elaborated in the Code of Civil F

S. 109. ss 109 and 110 Therefore, though there is no express provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907) for appeal to the Privy Council from orders of the High Court made under that Act, an appeal to the Privy Council is competent, if the case comes under ss 109 and 110 of the Code (l)

"Decree —For definition of decree see s 2 (2) above. An act of State is not a decree. Hence no appeal lies to the King in Council from an order of the Viceroy and Governor General of India in Council deposing the Maharajah of a Native State in India such an order being an act of State (l)

Preliminary Decree—An appeal lies to the King in Council from a preliminary decree, e.g., a decree declaring the liability of a party and directing accounts to be taken (n)

"Final order —A final order within the meaning of clauses (a) and (b) of the section is an order which finally decides any matter which is directly at issue in the case in respect to the rights of the parties. An order comprising the decision of a High Court upon a cardinal issue in a suit, that issue being one that goes to the foundation of the suit, and one that can never, while the decision stands, be questioned again in the suit, is final within the meaning of this section, notwithstanding that there may be subordinate inquiries to make (n). The expression final is used in contradiction to interlocutory (o). To determine whether an order is final or not it is necessary in each case to ascertain the nature of the proceedings (p).

In Rahimkhoy v Turner (q) which is the leading case on the subject, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that where an order directing the taking of accounts which the defendant contends ought not to be taken at all decides in effect that if the result should be found to be against the defendant he is liable to pay the amount the order is final within the meaning of this section. In the course of the judgment their Lordships said: "Now that question of liability was the sole question in dispute at the hearing of the cause, and it is the card not point in the suit. The arithmetical result is only a consequence of the liability. The real question in issue was the liability, and that has been determined by this decree against the defendant in such a way that in this suit it is final. The Court can never go back upon this decree so as to say that though the result of the account may be against the defendant still the defendant is not liable to pay anything. That is finally determined against him, and therefore in their Lordships' view the decree is a final one within the meaning of section 59 of the Code. But an order refusing to appoint a receiver in a suit is not a final order, and no appeal lies from it to the Privy Council (r). Similarly an order made in revision under s 115 of the Code deciding that the applicant should be allowed to sue in forma pauperis is not a final order (s). An order of the High Court directing the lower Court to proceed with the execution of a decree which the lower Court had refused to execute on the ground that it had no jurisdiction is not a final order (t). An order refusing an application to be brought on the record as the legal representative of a deceased party to a pending appeal is not a final but an interlocutory order (u). But where after a preliminary decree had been passed in a suit for partition declaring that the plaintiff was entitled to a one fourth share in the joint properties, the lower Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prosecute the suit, and the High Court on revision reversed the order, it was held that the order of the High Court was a final order as the effect of the order was to restore the Preliminary decree whereby the plaintiff was declared to be entitled to a one fourth share, and the order was to that extent a decision upon a cardinal point in the case (i)

An order made on appeal setting aside or confirming a sale under O 21, rr 90 and 92, is appealable to His Majesty in Council. Such an order is clearly one which deals finally with the rights of parties. It is true that no second appeal lies from such an order having regard to the provisions of s 104 (2) read with O 43, r 1 (j). But s 104 (2) cannot restrict the provision of the present section which allows an appeal to the King in Council from final orders (u). Similarly though no second appeal lies from an order passed in appeal from an order filing an award [see s 104 (1) (f)], an appeal lies to the King in Council from such an order under this section, the order being a final one (x). But an order refusing a stay under s 19 of the Arbitration Act 9 of 1899 is not a final order, as such an order does not finally dispose of the rights of the parties, but leaves them to be determined by the Court in the ordinary way (y). For the same reason an order made by a High Court reversing an order passed by the lower Court under O 23, r 3, recording a compromise (see O 43 (1) (a)), and directing the lower Court to proceed with the suit in the ordinary course, is not a final order (z).

An order of remand is not ordinarily capable of being the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council, being interlocutory ordinarily and not being final within the meaning of this section, but it would be a final order and therefore capable of appeal if it has the effect of deciding finally the cardinal point in the suit (i). Thus where the cardinal issue in a suit was as to the validity of a will, and the lower Court held that there was no valid will and dismissed the suit, but the High Court held on appeal that the will was valid and remanded the case under O 41, r 23, for the decision of subordinate points, it was held that the order of the High Court was a final order, as the order comprised a decision upon the cardinal issue in the suit and it was one that could never, while the decision stood, be questioned again in the same suit (b). Similarly where the cardinal point in a suit was whether notice under s 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 to annul certain encumbrances was properly served or not, and the High Court reversing the decision of the lower Court held that it was properly served and remanded the case to be tried on the other issues it was held that the order of the High Court was a final order (c). Where the lower Court held that the matter in issue in a suit was res judicata, and the High Court held that it was not and remanded the case for trial on the merits, it was held by the Calcutta High Court on an application for leave to the Privy Council that the order was final (d). The contrary has been held by the High Court of Allahabad (dd). But where the lower Court refused to set aside an ex parte decree without investigating under O 9, r 13, whether the defendant had sufficient cause for his non appearance and remanded the case for an inquiry under O 9, r 13, it was held that the order of the High Court was not a final order, but a purely interlocutory order directing

It has also been held that where the lower Court dismisses a suit on the ground that the suit is barred under O 2, r 2 (g), or that the suit framed is not maintainable (h) or that the plaintiff has no locus standi to maintain the suit (i) and the High Court reversing the decision of the lower Court remands the case for trial to that Court, the order of the High Court is not final. But there is a conflict of opinion whether where the lower Court dismisses a suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation, and the High Court reversing the decision of the lower Court remands the case for trial to that Court, the order of the High Court is final, it being held in some cases that the order is interlocutory (j) and in others that it is final (k).

In an Allahabad case an application was made by a company under sch II, cl 17, to file an agreement to submit to arbitration. The application was opposed (1) on the ground that the agreement not being under the seal of the company was invalid and also (2) on grounds of misrepresentation and fraud. The Court of first instance dismissed the application on the sole ground that the agreement not being under the seal of the company was invalid. On appeal the High Court reversed the decree holding that the agreement did not require to be under the seal of the company and remanded the case for trial of the other issues, i.e., issues as to fraud and misrepresentation. From this order of remand the respondent applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. It was held by a Full Bench that the order was not a "final order" within the meaning of cl (a) of this section, there being other important issues to dispose of, namely, the issues of misrepresentation and fraud and leave to appeal was refused (l). Sec 103 sub s (2) does not apply to appeals to His Majesty in Council (m).

An order of the High Court refusing to enrol a particular person as a legal practitioner under the Legal Practitioners Act III of 1879, is not one from which the High Court has jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council. Such an order is one passed in the exercise of the administrative powers of the Court (n). An order refusing an application under s 45 of the Specific Relief Act 1 of 1877 is a final order (o).

"Order passed on appeal"—An order passed by a High Court rejecting an appeal, is not a final order, and does not attract the meaning of the expression "order passed on appeal" under this section. More recently it has been held that an order passed by a High Court after the expiry of the time for appeal, is not a final order, and does not attract the meaning of the expression "order passed on appeal" under this section.

Prerogative of the Crown—The Code does not limit the prerogative of the Crown to admit an appeal. Hence special leave may be granted by the King in Council to appeal where leave has been refused by the High Court (u). But no special leave will as a rule be granted, unless there is some substantial question of law or general interest involved (x). See s. 112.

Clause (c) : Certificate as to fitness—Leave to appeal to the Privy Council may be granted (1) when a case fulfils the requirements of s 110, or (2) when it is otherwise a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council. In either case a certificate has to be granted by the High Court, in the first case, a certificate to the effect that the case fulfils the requirements of s 110 and is therefore a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council, and, in the second case, that for other reasons it is a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council [see O 45, rr 2 3]. Clause (c) of the present section refers to the second class of cases. In this class of cases it is not necessary that the order should be a final one. Nor is it necessary that the value of the subject matter of the suit should be Rs 10,000 or upwards (y). The only condition necessary is that the case should be a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council. Referring to this clause, Lord Hobhouse said: "That is clearly intended to meet special cases—such, for example, as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may be of great public or private importance" (z). This was amplified in a later case before the Judicial Committee where it was said that clause (c) contemplated "cases in which it is impossible to define in money value the exact character of the dispute, there are questions, as for example, those relating to religious rites and ceremonies to caste and family rights or such matters as the reduction of the capital of companies as well as questions of wide public importance in which the subject matter in dispute cannot be reduced into actual terms of money" (a). Thus where a petition was made by a company for a certificate to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the financial and commercial position of the Company might be seriously affected by the questions at issue, and that those questions were of importance to Indian companies generally, the High Court of Bombay granted the requisite certificate. Ss. 110. order sought to be appealed from in that case was an order dismissing a petition presented by the Company for a confirmation of a special resolution altering the memorandum of association of the Company (b). Similarly when a case involved a substantial question of law, and the point in dispute, though not measurable by money, was of considerable importance, namely, the extent of the control acquired by one who had built a fire temple for Parsis at Udwarda, the High Court of Bombay granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council (c). Similarly the question as to what is the legal position of a person who has collected the debts of a deceased person by virtue of his being a holder of a succession certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, was held to be a substantial question of law of general public importance, and leave to appeal was granted under cl (c) of this section (d). Leave to appeal was similarly granted where the question was whether the fraud of the mortgagor alone practised upon a Sub Registrar would vitiate registration and disentitle the mortgagee who was ignorant of the mortgagor's fraud to enforce the mortgage (e). The mere existence of a substantial question of law is not sufficient to give the High Court jurisdiction to give leave to appeal under clause (c) of this section, the question must also be of great public or private importance (f). As to questions of private importance referred to in the judgment of Lord Hobhouse, it has been held that by private importance is meant private importance to both parties to the litigation and not only to one of them (g).

The High Court has under this clause to certify that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. "To certify that a case is of that kind, though it is left entirely in the discretion of the Court, is a judicial process which could not be performed without special exercise of that discretion, evinced by the fitting certificate" (h). The certificate must make plain upon its face that the discretion conferred upon the High Court was invoked and was exercised (i). It is the certificate, and not the order for the certificate, which the Judicial Committee has to consider and act upon, and unless the certificate upon which the leave to appeal is based is in such a form as to justify that leave it cannot be held that the leave was properly given (j).

As to certificate of fitness in the case of decrees passed by the High Court in cross appeals from the same decree see the undermentioned case (k). See also notes to O 45-and where the decree or final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree or final order, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law

¶ 45, rr 45—Read O 45, rr 45, with this section

This section corresponds with s 596 of the Code of 1882, except that the words, "or final order," have been added in paragraphs 2 and 3 after the word "decree." See notes to s 109, 'Difference between the old and the new section,' on p 287 above

Construction of the section—In a recent case the Judicial Committee said—
"It must always be kept in view that no real mischief can arise from not allowing a very wide construction of the section, because such cases, if worthy of being tried by a higher tribunal, can always be dealt with under sub sec (c) of s 109 (l)

Date of valuation—As regards "the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance," the material date is the date of the institution of the suit. But there is a difference of opinion whether, if interest or mesne profits are claimed in a suit and awarded by the decree, the interest or mesne profits are to be calculated up to the date of the institution of the suit or up to the date of the decree. See notes below, "Amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance"

As regards "the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council," the material date is the date of the decree from which the appeal to His Majesty in Council is to be made (m)

As regards the value of "property" referred to in the second paragraph of this section, the material date is the date of the decree from which the appeal to His Majesty in Council is to be made (n)

"The amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance"—In some cases the value of the subject-matter in the suit in the Court of first instance may be over Rs 10,000 and the value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council may be less than Rs 10,000. In some cases, again the value of the subject matter in the suit in the Court of first instance may be less than Rs 10,000, and the value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council may be over Rs 10,000. What the section requires is that the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance must be over Rs. 10,000 or upwards, and the value also of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be Rs 10,000 or upwards. The word "and" in the first paragraph of this section means "and," and not "or" (o)

Mesne profits and interest—The only class of cases under the head, "amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance," that present any difficulty are those which include a claim for interest or for mesne profits. Prior to the year 1874 appeals to the Privy Council were governed by the Order in Council of April 10, 1838. By that Order it was prescribed that the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council must be Rs 10,000 or upwards. It was accordingly held by the Privy Council in cases which arose prior to 1874 that interest on money claims and mesne profits of immoveable property subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit actually awarded by the decree appealed from may be added in calculating the value of the matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council, but not interest or mesne profits accruing subsequent to the decree, and if that amount was Rs 10,000 or upwards a party was entitled to appeal though the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was less than Rs 10,000 (p). It was also held that in no case can the costs of the suit be added to the principal in calculating the appealable value (q). The condition that the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance should also be Rs 10,000 or upwards was first imposed by the Privy Council Appeals Act II of 1874 and it was subsequently inserted in the Code of Civil Procedure. The first authoritative decision we have on the meaning of the words, "amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance," is that of the Judicial Committee in Wot Chand v. Ganga Prasad (r). In that case the Court of first instance passed a decree for the plaintiff for principal and interest up to the date of the decree amounting to Rs 9,498, with further interest up to the date of realization. From this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court and that Court reversed the decree and dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiff then applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. On behalf of the plaintiff it was contended that interest subsequent to the decree should be added to the sum of Rs 9,498, and that if that was done, the value of the subject matter of the suit would exceed Rs 10,000. But this contention was overruled, and the application was refused on the ground that the claim and decree in the original Court were for less than Rs 10,000. The plaintiff then applied to the King in Council for special leave to appeal, but the application was refused. In the course of the judgment their Lordships of the Judicial Committee said:—"In the present case the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, construing that in the manner most favourable to the proposed appellant, was at the outside the amount for which he recovered his decree which was below Rs 10,000, amounting in round numbers I think, to about Rs 9,500. It is conceived that the words, construing that in the manner most favourable to the proposed appellant, mean even by including interest subsequent to the suit and up to the decree." This decision is an authority for the proposition that interest subsequent to the decree cannot be included in calculating the amount of the subject matter of the suit (s). But it is not clear from the judgment whether interest from the date of the suit up to the date of the decree can be so included. The High Court of Rangoon has held that it can be so included (ss).

As to suits for sale in the case of a mortgage, there is a conflict of opinion whether interest subsequent to the decree of the Court of first instance can be included in calculating the amount of the subject matter of the suit. It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that in calculating such amount the Court should include interest from the date of the decree [that is, the preliminary decree] up to the expiry of the period of six months provided in O 34, r 4 (f) According to the Calcutta (u), and Patna (t), High Courts, such interest should not be included in determining the appealable value.

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in two cases that in a suit for recovery of possession of immoveable property with mesne profits, the value of the subject matter of the suit consists of the value of the property plus mesne profits up to the date of the suit plus mesne profits from the date of the suit until the delivery of possession or until the expiration of three years from the date of the decree with interest (w) The decision in the first Calcutta case (x) proceeded on the authority of Mohideen v. Pitchay (y), a case under the Ceylon Ordinance No I of 1889 which does not impose any condition as to the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance The decision in the later Calcutta case, however, was based on the terms of s 211 of the Code of 1882 now O 20, r 12 (z) The Calcutta decisions were dissented from by the High Court of Madras in Subramania Ayyar v Sellammal (a), where it was held that in calculating the amount of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, mesne profits only up to the date of the institution of the suit can be added to the value of the property of which possession is claimed The correctness of the Calcutta decisions was also doubted by the Patna High Court in Maharaja Kesho Prasad v Shiva (b), but in later cases (c) the same Court followed the Calcutta decisions having regard to the practice of that Court in matters of settled practice to follow the Calcutta High Court

The sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value—In Radha Krishna v Sundaraswami (d), their Lordships of the Privy Council said: “The sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value The proceeding may in many cases, such as a suit for an instalment of rent or under a contract, raise the entire question of the contract relations between the parties and that question may, settled one way or the other, affect a much greater value and its determination may govern rights and liabilities of a value beyond the limit” It has thus been held that where the subject matter in dispute relates to a recurring liability and is in respect of a property above the appealable value, the case is within the first paragraph of this section Hence if the rent claimed in a suit is less than Rs 10,000, but the liability is of a recurring nature, and the property is above that value, the value of the subject matter must be deemed to be over Rs. 10,000 (e). It cannot, however, be said where the suit is to enforce payment of an annuity of Rs 125 per annum, that the value of the subject matter of the suit is Rs. 10,000 or upwards, for such an annuity cannot by any reasonable method of valuation be worth Rs 10,000 (f) Where the sole question was as to the destination of the income of the residue until the residuary attained twenty five, and the aggregate amount of the income was less than Rs 10,000 it was held that the value of the subject matter (namely, income) was less than Rs 10,000, though the value of the residue was over Rs 10 000 (g)

Value as laid in plaint—In suits relating to immoveable property the value of the subject matter of the suit is the selling or market value and not the value as deduced from the amount of the stamp upon the plaint. Hence if in a suit for possession of immoveable property the value of the property as laid in the plaint is under Rs 10,000 for the purpose of Court fees, it is open to the applicant to show, when applying for a certificate for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, that the market value of the property was Rs 10 000 or upwards (h). But a defendant who had previously adopted the value given in the plaint for the purpose of an appeal preferred by him to the High Court should not be allowed to contest that valuation on a petition by the plaintiff for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council on the principle that a party cannot both approbate and reprobate (i).

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that where in a suit for accounts the plaintiff values his claim for less than Rs 5,000 and institutes his suit in a Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs 5,000, he cannot be heard to say that the amount of the subject matter is Rs 10,000 or upwards (j). In the course of the judgment Beaman, J., said: "The amount or value of the subject matter of a suit can in no case exceed the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court in which it is instituted. It follows that the amount or value of the subject matter of a suit for the purposes of s 109, clauses (a) and (b), and s 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, if that suit is instituted in a Court the pecuniary limits of whose jurisdiction is Rs 5 000, can never be greater than Rs. 5,000." It is different, however, where a suit is for an injunction and a declaration relating to immoveable property, for such a suit according to the Bombay decisions may be brought in the Court of a Second Class Subordinate Judge though the value of the property may exceed Rs 5 000. In such a case, it has been held that the case does not fall under the first paragraph of this section, but that it falls under the second paragraph, and that the plaintiff is not precluded from showing that the decree involved some claim or question to property of the value of Rs 10 000 or upwards within the meaning of the second paragraph (k).

"The amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council"—Not only the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, but the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council, must be Rs 10,000 or upwards. The word and in the first paragraph of the section cannot be read as "or" (l). The words 'amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council' mean the amount or value at the date of the High Court decree under appeal (m). A sues B to recover Rs 10,800. The trial Judge passes a decree for A for Rs 8 280 with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of suit till the date of realization. B appeals from the decree to the High Court, and A's suit is dismissed. A appeals for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. If interest were to be added to the decretal amount Rs 8,280, the valuation of the proposed appeal to the Privy Council would be over Rs 10 000 Is A entitled to add the interest? The Allahabad Court has held that he is not (ml)

A mortgages his property to B. C claims that a portion of the property of the value of about Rs 6 000 belongs to him and that it did not belong to A. B then sues A on the mortgage the mortgage debt being Rs 38,000, and joins C as a defendant. A decree is passed for A on the mortgage. C's claim is allowed in part by the Court of first instance, but it is disallowed altogether by the High Court. Is C entitled to appeal to the King in Council? No because though the amount of the decree passed in favour of A exceeds Rs 10 000, the value of C's claim is less than Rs 10,000 (n). Note that C ought not to have been joined as a party to the suit at all [see notes to O 34, r 1, "Persons having an interest, etc.]

Single decree in several appeals—A, claiming to be the next reversioner on the death of a Hindu widow, sues B, C and D, being alienees of separate stems of the estate of the last male holder, and obtains a decree against them. B, C and D prefer separate appeals which are all disposed of by one decree. A applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decision as to the items in possession of B and D. The claims against the several alienees being based on really different causes of action, the fact that only one appellate decree was drawn up does not affect the requirements of this section, and consequently no leave can be granted in such of the appeals in which the value of the subject matter was below Rs 10,000 (o).

Abandonment of appeal in part after grant of certificate—A obtains a decree against B for Rs 11 000. B applies for leave to appeal from the decree to the Privy Council, and a certificate is granted. Afterwards in the printed case and at the hearing B withdraws part of his appeal, reducing by so doing the amount in dispute to Rs 9 000. Does this render the appeal incompetent? No, if B had a bona fide intention, when he applied for a certificate, to appeal in respect of the whole amount of the decree (p).

"Or the decree or final order must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards." The decree or final order referred to in the second paragraph of the section is the decree or final order from which the appeal is to be preferred to the Privy Council. The material date for determining the value of the "property" under this paragraph is the date of that decree or order (q).

Note that the expression used in the second paragraph of this section is "property" while that used in the first paragraph is "subject matter of the suit" and "subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council". It has been held by the High Court of Madras (r), that the second paragraph of this section applies only to cases which involve some claim or question to or respecting property additional to the actual subject-matter in dispute in the appeal and to be taken into account therewith in making up the appealable value, or it may possibly also apply to cases involving claims incapable of a money valuation such as claims to easements and the like, but apart from this if nothing beyond the actual subject-matter in dispute is involved, the first paragraph of the section alone applies. This decision is at variance with the view expressed by Maclean, C J., at the end of his judgment in Dalglish v Damodar (s), but that part of the judgment of the learned Chief Justice was not necessary for the determination of the case nor are any reasons given in support of that view. C J, expressed his preference for the view taken by the Madras High Court (f) In Udoychand v P E Guzdar (u), the plaintiff brought a suit to set aside an award in favour of the defendants for Rs 3000. The trial judge set aside the award, but the appellate Court reversed the decree and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, alleging that if the appeal succeeded he could proceed with a suit which had been stayed in which he had claimed Rs 81,000 as damages against the defendant for breach of the contract which had led to the reference to arbitration. The High Court refused leave, and the plaintiff applied for special leave to appeal from the decree of the High Court. The Judicial Committee held that the plaintiff's claim upon the contract was too remote to be considered as being 'property' indirectly involved within the meaning of this section and the petition was dismissed. Their Lordships said: "Their Lordships are not inclined to attempt any precise definition of the word property. The Civil Procedure Code has not done so, and any definition might not be found in the future precisely to fit the circumstances which the kaleidoscope of actual experience may produce. But they think that the present is not a case where the issue of the suit can be said directly and rectly to involve other property. Let the situation be considered. If this appeal were allowed and were successful, what would be the position? Their Lordships think that this is not really consequential on the present decree and too remote to be entitled to the description of being 'property' indirectly involved in the issue of this suit."

When the plaintiff, a tenant in common, obtained a decree against the defendant another tenant in common, for a mandatory injunction directing the defendant to demolish buildings erected by the defendant on a plot of common land, the buildings being worth more than Rs 10,000, the High Court granted leave to the defendant to appeal to the Privy Council, though the subject matter of the suit was valued for purposes of court fees at Rs 1,500 (v). Similarly where the plaintiff obtained a decree for possession of a piece of land worth Rs 2,000, and the result of the decree was to oblige the defendant to remove buildings worth more than Rs 10,000, which the defendant had built on the land, leave was granted to appeal to the Privy Council (w). Where the value of the subject matter of the suit was below Rs 10,000 but the effect of a deed of gift, with regard to the construction of which there was a dispute, would govern the ownership of property worth five lacs, a certificate of appeal was granted (x). Similarly, where the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council was below Rs 10,000, but the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council involved a decision as to the validity of an award which dealt with property worth over Rs 10,000, a certificate of appeal was granted (y).

A sues B for a declaration that he is entitled to one third share in certain property and for an order that the property should be partitioned and his share given to him. The property exceeds Rs 10,000 in value but the share claimed by A is of a value less than Rs 10,000. A decree is passed for A as prayed. B then applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. Can it be said in such a case that the decree involves some claim or question to property of a value exceeding Rs 10,000? Yes, according to the Calcutta High Court (z), no, according to the Bombay High Court unless there be other property outside the subject matter in dispute which can be affected by the decision (a).

In De Silva's case (aa) Sir Lawrence Jenkins, ■ J, held that in order to determine the value prescribed by this section, the decree has to be looked at as it affects the interests of the parties prejudiced by it, and where the detriment to the party seeking relief is estimated at less than Rs 10 000 then the value of the matter in dispute in appeal is not of the prescribed value, and the decree itself does not involve any claim or question to, or respecting property of the prescribed value, and the case does not fulfil the requirements of the section. The Patna High Court has followed the Bombay decisions (b). It has similarly been held by the High Court of Bombay that in a suit by a partner for accounts and for recovery of his share, it is the value of the plaintiff's share that must be looked to, and not the value of the whole of the partnership assets (c). It appears however, from a judgment of the same High Court in the undermentioned case (d) that if A sues B claiming the exclusive user of a well and compound valued at Rs 10 000 odd, and the High Court holds that A and B are equally entitled to the user, the decree must be deemed to involve property of the value of Rs 10,000 odd so as to entitle A to a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

In a suit for an easement of light and air claimed by the owner of property A against the owner of property B, it is the value of property A, and not the value of the easement, that determines the appealable value (e). In a recent Bombay case A sued B for possession under the Bombay Rent Act 2 of 1918. The rent of the portion occupied by B was Rs 275 per month. The High Court on appeal decreed A's suit. It was held that as the rent capitalized at 20 years purchase amounted to upwards of Rs 10 000, the decree involved indirectly a claim respecting property of the value of over Rs 10 000, and that B was entitled to leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council (f). In a Lahore case, however, where A sued to eject B alleging that B was a tenant at will, and B contended that he was a permanent tenant paying an annual rent of Rs 1,200, the Court held that the issue in the suit, namely, whether B was a permanent tenant or a tenant at will did not involve any question respecting property of the value of Rs 10 000 or upwards (g).

Where the matter is under the appealable value or is not capable of valuation.—In such a case, a party desirous of appealing to the Privy Council may apply for a certificate that the case is "a fit one for appeal" to His Majesty in Council under s 109, cl (c) (h). See notes to s 109 "Certificate as to fitness."

"Where the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree"—It is not enough where the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree, that the appeal involves some substantial question of law, it is further necessary that the amount of the subject matter of the suit and of the subject matter in dispute on appeal must be Rs 100 000 or upwards, or that the decree must involve some claim to property of like amount. The existence of a question of law of itself does not give a right of appeal in the ordinary course of procedure under this

5. 110. section (i) This is clear from the word "and" with which the last paragraph of this section begins

It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the word "decision" in this clause means merely the decision of the suit, and cannot, like the word "judgment," be defined as meaning the statement of the ground on which the Court proceeds to pass the decree. It follows from this that in order to "affirm" the decision of the Court below it is sufficient if the appellate Court affirms the decree of the Court below, it need not also affirm the grounds of fact on which the judgment was passed. Thus where the decree of the appellate Court was that "the appeal be dismissed," but the reasons given were not the same as those of the lower Court in respect of some matters of fact it was held that the decision of the Court below was "affirmed" within the meaning of this section, and that no certificate should be granted unless the appeal involved a substantial question of law (j). Nor is it necessary in order to "affirm" the decision of the Court below that the finding of the appellate Court should coincide in terms with that of the Court below. It is sufficient if the findings of fact of the two Courts are in effect the same (l). And it has been held that a decree of the High Court dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution the appellants not having supplied their counsel with materials upon which to argue the appeal when it was called on for hearing, is a decree 'affirming' the decision of the Court below (i). Where the appellate Court agrees with the findings of the Court below upon the merits, but varies the order as to costs (m), or awards simple interest from a certain date instead of compound interest (n) it amounts to an affirmation of the decision of the lower Court. There is a conflict of opinion whether if the Court of first instance passes a decree for the plaintiff, say for Rs. 50,000, and the High Court on appeal reduces the amount to Rs. 40,000, the latter decree is a decree of affirmance, it being held by the High Court of Calcutta (o) that it is, and by the High Court of Allahabad that it is not (p). A sues B on a mortgage. B denies the mortgage. The Court of first instance holds that the mortgage is genuine and decrees A's claim in full. B appeals to the High Court. The High Court affirms the decree of the Court of first instance upon the question of the genuineness of the mortgage, but reduces the rate of interest by Rs. 300. B applies for leave to appeal to the King in Council on the question of the genuineness of the mortgage, but not on the question of interest. The decree of the High Court is a decree of affirmance so far as the subject matter of the appeal to His Majesty in Council is concerned, and B is not entitled to leave to appeal. The reduction of interest which, be it noted, is in B's favour, does not amount to such a modification of the decree as to entitle B to leave to appeal (q).

In a suit by A against B a decree is passed in A's favour. B appeals from the decree but the appeal is dismissed by the lower appellate Court. B then appeals to the High Court. The appeal is heard by a single Judge of the High Court who reverses the decree of the lower appellate Court. From this judgment A appeals to the High Court under cl. 15 of the charter with the result that the judgment of the single Judge is reversed by a Bench of two Judges, B applies for leave to His Majesty in Council. Here the decree appealed from is the decree passed by the Bench of two Judges of the High Court. The Court immediately below the Court constituted by the two Judges is the lower appellate Court, and not the Court constituted by the single Judge of the High Court. This therefore is a case in which the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below, and no leave to appeal can therefore be granted unless the appeal involves some substantial question of law. The above result follows from the fact that the Code makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court, that is to say, from a single Judge of the High Court the right of appeal from the judgment of a single Judge of the High Court is conferred by cl. 15 of the Letters Patent (r).

Rule followed by Judicial Committee in cases of concurrent findings of finding and conclusion, the third judge arriving at the same result upon a different finding of fact, there are concurrent findings to which the rule of practice of the Board referred to below applies (s).

The Judicial Committee has undoubtedly power as a Court of review to review the concurrent findings of facts of the lower Court, though the appeal before it may fail on the question of law on which leave to appeal was granted. But as a general rule the Committee will not interfere with these findings on the ground that where the question is one of fact, it is a question of the weight and credibility of evidence upon which a Court of review can never be in quite as good a position to form an opinion as the Court of first instance (t). In Umrao Begum v. Irshad Hussain (u), Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of the Board said: "The question is not only a question of fact, but it is one which embraces a great number of facts whose significance is best appreciated by those who are most familiar with Indian manners and customs. Their Lordships would be specially unwilling in such a case to depart from the general rule which forbids a fresh examination of facts for the purpose of disturbing concurrent findings by the lower Court." The mere fact that the lower Courts do not agree on all the steps which lead to one and the same conclusion is no reason for disregarding the said rule (v). "It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent findings of fact, that different Courts, in arriving at the same result upon the same evidence, have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations. A difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence, whatever view be taken of it, must necessarily lead to one and the same inference" (w). Sometimes the nature of the question may be such (as where the question is whether a deed of gift was executed by a Mahomedan under apprehension of death) that the Judicial Committee will not interfere with concurrent findings of the lower Courts on that question even where the evidence is such as to justify either view (x). "The rule [above referred to], however, is not an absolute rule, it presses upon the appellant with more or less weight according to the circumstances of the case, and no doubt the fact that the Courts have differed on some important but subordinate questions is a matter to be taken into consideration in determining whether the evidence before the lower Courts should be reviewed in detail" (y). Thus concurrent findings of

110. facts have been allowed to be disputed where the question of fact appeared to be a good deal mixed up with law (z). They have also been allowed to be disputed where the decision though ultimately one of fact, turned upon the admissibility or value of many subordinate facts and involved the construction of documents and other questions of law (a). In a recent case their Lordships of the Privy Council said "If it appears that underlying findings of fact there are questions of law on which the findings proceeded or that there is a case that the judges misdirected themselves, then the rule as to concurrent findings not being the subject of appeal does not apply to the exclusion of such grounds of law as are alluded to (b).

The
is a decis
since that is a matter of mixed law and fact (d) Nor does it apply where the question is one of inference from documents, for that is a question of law (c)

The appeal must involve some substantial question of law—No appeal lies to the Privy Council from an appellate decree when there are concurrent findings of the appellate Court and of the Court below upon questions of fact and when upon such findings no substantial question of law arises (f). To grant leave to appeal on the ground that "there seems to be a point of law which however has not been argued here," is not a compliance with the provisions of this section (g).

Intoler—Suppose that there are concurrent findings of fact of such a character that the Privy Council, having regard to the rule set forth on p 301 above, would decline to disturb them in appeal, suppose, further, that no substantial question of law could arise before the Privy Council unless such findings were set aside by the Privy Council, can the proposed appeal be said in such a case to intolite a question of law so as to entitle a party to leave to appeal to the Privy Council? No, according to the Allahabad High Court (A). Yes according to the Calcutta High Court (i). In a Bombay case Ranade J., accepted the view of the Calcutta High Court, J. J. did not express any opinion (j).

Substantial question of law—The rejection of an application under O 41, r 27 [Code of 1882, s. 568] for the reception of additional evidence does not involve a substantial question of law (1). Omitting to state reasons in an appellate judgment as required

Bar of certain appeals under clause (a)—The reason why no appeal is allowed from the decrees and orders referred to in cl (a) of this section is that an appeal from such decrees and orders is provided for in cl 15 of the Letters Patent. The object clearly seems to be that a party should not be permitted to appeal directly to the King in Council from the said decrees and orders but that he should, in the first instance appeal under the said cl 15 to the other judges of the High Court (v)

Order of one Judge—No appeal lies to His Majesty in Council from an order of a single Judge of a High Court passed in revision under s 115. The fact that the right of appeal (if any such there was) to appeal to the Judges under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of a single judge sitting in revision has been taken away since the amendment of that clause does not affect the positive enactment contained in this section (w)

115. [S 622] The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such subordinate court appears—

Revision

- (a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or
- (b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or

(c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity,

the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit

Code of 1882, s 622—This section corresponds with s 622 of the Code of 1882 There is no material alteration in the section

Limits of revisional jurisdiction—The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court under this section is called Revisional Jurisdiction. The powers of the High Court under this section can only be invoked in cases in which no appeal lies to the High Court provided the case has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and such subordinate Court appears—

- (1) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or
- (2) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, or
- (3) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity

The High Court has no power to interfere in revision under this section except in the cases mentioned in the section. Whether a particular order is expedient or not is not a ground on which the High Court can interfere under this section (y). Further, in the exercise of revisional powers, it is not the duty of the High Court to enter into the merits of the evidence, it has only to see whether the requirements of the law have been duly and properly obeyed by the Court whose order is the subject of revision and whether the irregularity as to failure or exercise of jurisdiction is such as to justify interference with the order (z). If the High Court finds that the external conditions of jurisdiction, of investigation and of command have been satisfied by the inferior Court, it will not substitute its own appreciation of evidence, or its own judgment thereon, for the determination of the inferior Court, in any matter committed by the Legislature to the discretion of the inferior Court (a).

High Courts' powers of superintendence—A case may not fall under this section, and yet it may fall under s 15 of the Charter Act, 1861, now s. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915

Certiorari—The provisions of this section are not exhaustive. Cases may be imagined, though rare ones which may not fall under this section. For such cases it cannot be said that the powers of the High Courts which have inherited the ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts to issue writs of certiorari have been taken away by the provisions of this section (b).

"In which no appeal lies thereto"—The High Court cannot act under this section in any case in which an appeal lies to that Court. The word "appeal" is not for revision is made in a case in which an appeal lies the application may be converted into an appeal (c)

Interlocutory orders—To give the High Court jurisdiction to revise an interlocutory order it is necessary among other things that it must be a case decided with in the meaning of this section, and further, that no appeal lies to the High Court from that order. For the purposes of this section interlocutory orders may be divided into two classes, namely—

A Those from which an appeal lies under s 104 (1). These are orders of the Court of first instance

B Those from which no appeal lies. These may be—

(a) orders of the Court of first instance from which no appeal is allowed under s 104 (1), or

(b) orders passed in first appeal from which no second appeal lies having regard to the provisions of s 104 (2)

As regards interlocutory orders falling under group A, the High Court has no jurisdiction to revise them as they are appealable orders (f)

As regards interlocutory orders falling under group B, there is a conflict of opinion whether they are subject to revision under this section. This conflict turns mainly on the word 'case' and the word 'may' in the section. Does the word 'case' include an issue or part of a case? If it does not an interlocutory order is not a case and it is not capable of revision in any case. It has been held by some Courts that the word 'case' includes part of a case, and by others that it does not.

Assuming that the word 'case' includes part of a case in other words includes interlocutory orders, and assuming further, that the other conditions of the section are satisfied, there can be no doubt that the High Court can interfere in revision with such orders. There is also no doubt that though the High Court can revise such orders it is not bound to do so for the section says that the High Court may call for the record of any case, it being discretionary with the Court to call for the record. The matter being one of discretion the question has arisen (and herein comes another divergence of opinion)—in what cases is it proper for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to revise interlocutory orders? To appreciate the different views on the subject it is necessary to bear in mind that though an interlocutory order may not be appealable under s 104 it may be challenged in the appeal from the final decree under s 105 provided the order is one 'affecting the decision of the case'. Again there are some interlocutory orders from which an injured party is given a right of suit to set aside the order as stated in the notes "Alternative remedy by way of suit" on p 310. It has been held in some cases that if a party aggrieved by an interlocutory order has the alternative remedy of challenging the order in an appeal from the final decree under s 105 or if he has the alternative remedy by way of suit the High Court should not in the exercise of its discretion interfere in revision with such order that the power to interfere being exercisable only where there is no such remedy. For instance, no appeal lies from an order of a District Court made on appeal granting a temporary injunction [s 104 (2)] further any error in such order cannot be objected to in an appeal from the final decree as it cannot possibly affect the decision of the case within the meaning of s 105 nor does a suit lie to set aside such an order, the High Court may therefore interfere in revision with the order (g). For the same reason where a Court asks a plaintiff to pay additional Court fee before his suit can be entertained the High Court may interfere in revision with the order as the order is one which involves the jurisdiction of the Court to try the suit (f).

(c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity,

the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit

Code of 1882, s 622—This section corresponds with s 622 of the Code of 1882. There is no material alteration in the section.

Limits of revisional jurisdiction—The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court under this section is called Revisional Jurisdiction. The powers of the High Court under this section can only be invoked in cases in which no appeal lies to the High Court provided the case has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and such subordinate Court appears—

- (1) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or
- (2) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, or
- (3) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity

The High Court has no power to interfere in revision under this section except in the cases mentioned in the section. Whether a particular order is expedient or not is not a ground on which the High Court can interfere under this section (y). Further, in the exercise of revisional powers, it is not the duty of the High Court to enter into the merits of the evidence. It has only to see whether the requirements of the law have been duly and properly obeyed by the Court whose order is the subject of revision and whether the irregularity as to failure or exercise of jurisdiction is such as to justify interference with the order (z). If the High Court finds that the external conditions of jurisdiction, of investigation and of command have been satisfied by the inferior Court, it will not substitute its own appreciation of evidence or its own judgment thereon for the determination of the inferior Court in any matter committed by the Legislature to the discretion of the inferior Court (a).

High Courts' powers of superintendence—A case may not fall under this section and yet it may fall under s 15 of the Charter Act, 1861, now s 107 of the Government of India Act 1915.

Certiorari—The provisions of this section are not exhaustive. Cases may be imagined though rare ones which may not fall under this section. For such cases it cannot be said that the powers of the High Courts which have inherited the ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts to issue writs of certiorari have been taken away by the provisions of this section (b).

"In which no appeal lies thereto"—The High Court cannot act under this section in any case in which an appeal lies to that Court. The word 'appeal' is not confined to first appeal, it includes second appeal (c). Where an appeal is preferred in a case in which no appeal lies, the High Court may in a proper case treat the appeal as an application for revision and deal with it on that footing (d). Similarly if an application for revision is made in a case in which an appeal lies the application may be converted into an appeal (e)

Interlocutory orders—To give the High Court jurisdiction to revise an interlocutory order it is necessary among other things that it must be a 'case decided' with in the meaning of this section, and, further, that no appeal lies to the High Court from that order. For the purposes of this section interlocutory orders may be divided into two classes, namely—

A Those from which an appeal lies under s 104 (1) These are orders of the Court of first instance

B Those from which no appeal lies These may be—

(a) orders of the Court of first instance from which no appeal is allowed under s 104 (1), or

(b) orders passed in first appeal from which no second appeal lies have regard to the provisions of s 104 (2)

As regards interlocutory orders falling under group A, the High Court has no jurisdiction to revise them as they are appealable orders (f)

As regards interlocutory orders falling under group B, there is a conflict of opinion whether they are subject to revision under this section. This conflict turns mainly on the word "case" and the word "may" in the section. Does the word "case" include an issue or part of a case? If it does not, an interlocutory order is not a "case," and it is not capable of revision in any case. It has been held by some Courts that the word "case" includes part of a case, and by others that it does not.

Assuming that the word "case" includes part of a case, in other words, includes interlocutory orders, and assuming, further, that the other conditions of the section are satisfied, there can be no doubt that the High Court can interfere in revision with such orders. There is also no doubt that though the High Court can revise such orders, it is not bound to do so, for the section says that the High Court may call for the record of any case, it being discretionary with the Court to call for the record. The matter being one of discretion the question has arisen (and herein comes another divergence of opinion)—in what cases is it proper for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to revise interlocutory orders? To appreciate the different views on the subject, it is necessary to bear in mind that though an interlocutory order may not be appealable under s 104, it may be challenged in the appeal from the final decree under s 103, provided the order is one "affecting the decision of the case." Again there are some interlocutory orders from which an injured party is given a right of suit to set aside the order as stated in the notes, "Alternative remedy by way of suit," on p 310. It has been held in some cases that if a party aggrieved by an interlocutory order has the alternative remedy of challenging the order in an appeal from the final decree under s 103, or if he has the alternative remedy by way of suit, the High Court should not in the exercise of its discretion interfere in revision with such order, that the power to interfere being exercisable only where there is no such remedy. For instance, no appeal lies from an order of a District Court made on appeal granting a temporary injunction (s 104 (2)), further, any error in such order cannot be objected to in an appeal from the final decree, as it cannot possibly affect the decision of the case within the meaning of s 103, nor does a suit lie to set aside such an order, the High Court may therefore interfere in revision with the order (g). For the same reason where a Court asks a plaintiff to pay additional Court fee before his suit can be entertained, the High Court may interfere in revision with the order as the order is one which involves the jurisdiction of the Court to try the suit (h).

But why, it has been asked, and asked pertinently in a large majority of cases should the discretion of the High Court be fettered with such a hard and fast rule? Why should the High Court refuse to do so?

affected party With these prefatory remarks we proceed to state the views of the different High Courts on the subject of a case, that it does not therefore include an interlocutory order, and that the High Court therefore has no power to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders in any

Pratt v. F. H. Davis, 1911

On the other hand it has been held by the Calcutta (l), Madras (m) Patna (n) and Rangoon (o) High Courts that the word "case" is wide enough to include an interlocutory order, that the words "record of any case" include so much of the proceedings in any case as relate to an interlocutory order, and that the High Court therefore has the power to interfere in revision with orders passed at any stage of a suit, though there may be another remedy open to the injured party, e.g., by appeal from the final decree under s. 105. At the same time it has been laid down that the High Court will not, in the exercise of its discretion, interfere in revision with interlocutory orders, unless its non interference might lead to failure of justice or irreparable injury. Following this principle the High Court of Calcutta in one case set aside an order of the Subordinate Court framing additional issues which were unnecessary for the disposal of the suit, when it appeared that the trial of those issues would entail an expenditure of time and money wholly out of proportion to the matter in dispute and cause irreparable injury to the plaintiff (p). Similarly where the lower Court refused the plaintiff's application for an amendment of the plaint the High Court of Madras set aside the order in revision and directed the plaint to be amended (q). In another case where the question was whether an election petition was maintainable at all, and the lower Court held that it was, the Madras High Court set aside the order in revision, and dismissed the petition. The Court observed that if the petition did not disclose any ground for an enquiry, the lower Court would by holding the inquiry exercise a jurisdiction not vested in it by law and to hold it would simply lead to waste of time of the Court and of the parties (r). The High Court of Bombay has also held that the word "case" includes part of a case, and that the High Court has the power to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders. But there is a difference of opinion within that Court whether the High Court should in the exercise of its discretion interfere only in cases where there would otherwise be no remedy or whether it may interfere even if the injured party has another remedy open to him by an appeal from the final decree under s 103 or by way of suit. On the one hand, it has been laid down by a Full Bench in Shiva Nathaji v Joma (s) decided in 1883, that though the High Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision with interlocutory orders where the aggrieved party has another remedy open to him either by an appeal from the final decree under s 103 or by suit, it will interfere if the appeal would manifestly be ineffectual and non interference would result in a defeat of law and a grave wrong to the aggrieved party. On the other hand, a Divisional Bench consisting of Sargent, C J and Candy, J held in Motilal v Nana (t), decided in 1894, that the High Court should not in the exercise of its discretion interfere in revision with interlocutory orders except in cases where the injured party had no other remedy open to him. No reference was made in the judgment to the Full Bench decision in Shiva Nathaji's case. The decision in Motilal v Nana was disapproved by a Divisional Bench of the same High Court in Secretary of State v Narasimhas (u), decided in 1924, and the Court followed the principle laid down in the Full Bench ruling. In the course of his judgment Koyajee, J, observed that the section did not make the absence of another remedy a necessary condition of its applicability.

The sharp distinction as to the meaning of the word "case" between the view taken by the High Courts of Allahabad and Lahore on the one hand and the other High Courts on the other hand is brought out by the following case: A institutes a suit against B in Court X. One of the issues in the suit is whether Court X has jurisdiction to try the suit. The Court holds that it has and that the suit must proceed. B applies to the High Court for a revision of the order of Court X. Has the High Court power to interfere in revision with this order, which is an interlocutory order? According to the Allahabad (v) and Lahore (w) decisions, the High Court has no such power as the decision of an issue in a suit is not a decision of a "case" within the meaning of this section. According to the High Courts of Bombay (x) and Madras (y), the High Court has the power to interfere with the order in revision, as the word "case" includes part of a case, and, further, the High Court would in the exercise of its discretion interfere with the order if it came to the conclusion that the order was wrong, though the order may be challenged in an appeal from the final decree, for if Court X had no

115. jurisdiction to try the suit, it would result in unnecessary waste of time and money

As regards orders made on an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, a distinction has been made by the Allahabad High Court between an order granting the application and an order rejecting the application. An order rejecting the application, it has been held amounts to a decision of the case and is therefore open to revision, but an order granting the application is not a decision of the case, but a mere interlocutory order, and it is not therefore open to revision (z). In a recent Allahabad case (a), however, Walsh, J., expressed the opinion that no revision lies even from an order rejecting the application the ground of the decision being that it is not a "case decided" within the meaning of this section, no opinion was expressed by Piggott, J. But where the Court of first instance, instead of trying the question of the petitioner's pauperism, tries the question of his title to the property claimed by him, and finding that the title was not established, dismisses the application to sue in forma pauperis, the High Court can interfere in revision, for in not trying the question of pauperism the Court failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it by law, and in trying the question of title it exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law (b). The High Court will also interfere in revision if the lower Court dismisses the application on the ground that the petitioner's claim is barred as res judicata, as such an inquiry is not warranted by the provisions of O 33, r 5 (c).

Alternative remedy by way of suit—The powers conferred upon the High Court by this section are discretionary. Hence though a party may not have a remedy by way of appeal the High Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse to interfere under this section if there is any other remedy open to the party. "The especial and extraordinary remedy by invoking the revisional powers of this Court should not be exercised unless as a last resource for an aggrieved litigant" (d). "The recognised rule is that if a party to civil proceedings applies to us to exercise our powers under s. [115], he must satisfy us that he has no other remedy open to him under the law to set right that which he says has been illegally, irregularly or without jurisdiction done by a subordinate Court" (e). But when it is said by the opponent that there is some other remedy open to the applicant, and the application for revision is opposed on that ground, it must be shown that it is a certain and conclusive remedy allowed by law. Thus no application will be entertained to revise an order made under O 21, rr 60, 61 or 62 [Code of 1882, ss 280, 281, 282], for though no appeal lies from such order, the party against whom the order is made has a special remedy by way of suit under O 21, r 63 [Code of 1882, s 283] (f). Similarly no application will be entertained to revise a decree passed in a suit for possession instituted under s 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, for though no appeal lies from a decree passed in such suit, the party against whom the decree is passed is not precluded from instituting a regular suit to establish his title to possession (g). But if the remedy is a doubtful one, the High Court may interfere by way of revision under this section (h). And even if the remedy is certain and conclusive, the High Court may in an exceptional case interfere

(2) Muhammad Ayub v. Muhammad Mahmud

by way of revision under this section (i) "No doubt the ordinary rule is that where an aggrieved party has other remedy available, this Court is unwilling to interfere, but it is unquestionable that even if there be such remedy, this Court may interfere in exceptional cases" (j) Thus where the lower Court refused the application of a decree-holder for rateable distribution under s 73 on the ground that there was another property of the judgment debtor available for the satisfaction of his claim, the High Court of Madras interfered on revision under this section, though the applicant had clearly a remedy by suit Miller, J, said "I do not depart from the view . . . that where a party has a remedy elsewhere than in the High Court, the High Court should not except in special cases interfere under [this section] But here we have a case in which there is no doubt as to the rights of the parties, and no remedy, if I do not interfere, except by a suit to which there can be no defence, and which therefore would surely multiply proceedings In such a case, the lesser evil, at any rate, is interference under [this section]" (k) In a recent Patna case, Manuk, J, said: "When the High Court can by interfering under section 115 in appropriate cases terminate the litigation, the mere fact that another remedy by suit only lies should not per se be a reason for non interference" (l)

Whether High Court 'may' of its own motion call for record.—The powers of revision given by this section are very wide, and the High Court can of its own motion call for any record under this section, if it appears desirable so to do to that Court (m) It is not necessary to the exercise of its powers under this section that it should be put into motion by the party aggrieved by the proceeding complained of. It has been so held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Allahabad and Madras (n) In a Bombay case, however, where a Collector applied to the High Court to revise a decision of a Mamlatdar, the High Court declined to interfere, stating that in so doing it was following the established practice of the Court, and adding that the defendant, if he felt aggrieved, could himself apply to that Court (o)

"Case"—The word "case" is more comprehensive than the word "suit." In a recent case before the Judicial Committee (p), the question arose whether proceedings by petition to a Civil Court in a matter under s 10 of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 constituted a "case" within the meaning of this section Dealing with that question, their Lordships said "No definition is to be found in the Code of the word 'case' It cannot, in their Lordships' view, be confined to a litigation in which there is a plaintiff who seeks to obtain particular relief in damages or otherwise against a defendant who is before the Court It must, they think, include an ex parte application such as that made in this case, praying that persons in the position of trustees or officials should perform their trust or discharge their official duties" The word "case" also includes proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, Probate and Administration Act, 1881, Succession Certificate Act, 1889, Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, etc (q). There is a conflict of opinion whether the word "case" includes an interlocutory order: See notes, "Interlocutory Orders," on p. 307 above.

Subordinate Court—A Court subordinate to a High Court = one over which the High Court has appellate jurisdiction (r) A District Registrar is not a "Court" within the meaning of this section (s) Nor is the Rent Controller of Rangoon (t) Nor is a District Judge acting under s 4 of Bombay Act 12 of 1850 (u). The Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court at Bombay acting under the powers granted to him by s. 33 of the Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, is not a Court subordinate to the High Court of Bombay (v) Nor is a District Judge acting under s 23 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1873, a Court subordinate to the High Court of Bombay (w) The High Court of Kumaun is not a Court subordinate to the High Court of Allahabad (x) The High Court therefore has no jurisdiction to revise orders made by them But a District Judge acting under s 57 of the Madras Local Boards Act 14 of 1920, is a "Court" within the meaning of this section (y)

The Court of the Resident at Aden is subordinate to the High Court of Bombay as regards questions which should be stated by the Resident for the decision of the High Court under the provisions of s 8 of the Aden Act 2 of 1864 (z) His Britannic Majesty's Courts in Zanzibar are also subordinate to the High Court of Bombay (a) A Collector exercising judicial functions under the Bombay Mamlatdar's Courts Act II of 1906 is a Court within the meaning of this section (b) And so is a Civil Court acting or purporting to act under the provisions of s 10 of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 (c) It has been held by the High Courts of Madras (d), and Bombay (e), that where an application is made to a Collector for a reference to the Civil Court under s 18 of the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894, and the application is rejected, the Collector in so doing does not act as a "Court," and his order is not subject to revision by the High Court. The High Court of Patna has held that a Collector acting under the second proviso to s 49 of that Act is a "Court," and an order made by him refusing to refer to the Civil Court a question under that proviso is subject to revision by the High Court (f) The High Court of Calcutta has held that a Collector acting under s 11 of that Act is not a "Court" within the meaning of this section (ff)

A Judge of a High Court sitting alone is not a Court subordinate to the High Court, but performs a function directed to be performed by the High Court [clause 36, Letters Patent], therefore, no decision of a single Judge can be revised under this section (g)

"Jurisdiction —We have already dealt in the notes to s 21 with the meaning of jurisdiction. The expression jurisdiction is not confined to the jurisdiction to entertain a suit or appeal. A Court may have jurisdiction to entertain a suit or appeal, and yet it may have no jurisdiction to pass a particular order in the suit or appeal. If it does so the case is one under clause (a) of the section and the High Court is entitled to interfere in revision. This follows from the recent pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in Lachmi Narain v Balma Kund (h) set out on p 317 below in the notes. The same topic continued, and in Birj Mohun v Rai Uma Nath (i)

Exercise by Court of jurisdiction not vested in it by law—If a Court assumes a jurisdiction which by reason of the pecuniary or territorial limits of the jurisdiction of such Court or by reason of the subject matter of the suit or other proceeding instituted in it is not vested in it by law, the High Court to which such Court is subordinate may exercise its revisional powers under this section. But the High Court will not interfere in revision, unless the facts from which absence of jurisdiction on the part of a subordinate Court may be inferred are patent upon the face of the record (j). Similarly the High Court has power to interfere in revision under clause (a) if the lower appellate Court entertains an appeal from an order from which no appeal is allowed (k) or if a Court administering the Succession Certificate Act, 1889 appoints a receiver (l) or where the lower Court has no jurisdiction to inquire into a question, and it inquires into it (m).

For other cases under this head see notes. The same topic continued, on p 316 below, and notes. Wrong decision of lower appellate Court etc., on p 310 below.

Failure to exercise jurisdiction—Where a Court having jurisdiction to act in a matter declines jurisdiction in the matter, this section will apply. Thus where a Court has jurisdiction to accept a plaint (n) or to execute a decree (o), or to review its judgment (p) but refuses to accept the plaint or to execute the decree or to review its judgment on the ground that it has no jurisdiction the High Court will interfere under this section. Similarly where a Court refused to confirm a sale under s 312 of the Code of 1882 [now O 21, r 92] believing that it had no power to do so if the purchaser objected to the sale on the ground of misrepresentation, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the case was one in which the Court had failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, and that the decision was therefore subject to revision under the present section (q). The rejection of an application for fixing a standard rent on the ground that the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920, were not applicable to the case, is a refusal by the Rent Controller to exercise jurisdiction conferred upon him by the Act, and is accordingly a proper case for interference under this section (r). An order returning a memorandum of appeal for presentation to another Court is also open to revision (s). Interference under this section is also appropriate where a Court has no discretionary power to refuse a relief, but refuses the relief,

Thus where a Court refused the application of a decree holder for a rateable distribution under s. 73, though according to its own finding he was clearly entitled to such distribution, on the ground that there was other property of the judgment debtor available for the satisfaction of his claim, the High Court of Madras interfered under this section (1). But where a Court has a discretion in a matter, a wrong exercise of such discretion is not a proper ground for interference under this section (u).

For other cases under this head, see notes, "The same topic continued," on p. 316 below, and notes, "Wrong decision of lower appellate Court, etc.," on p. 319 below.

Where a Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction has acted illegally or with material irregularity.—Cl. (c) of the section contemplates cases, other than those referred to in cls. (a) and (b), namely, cases where the Court has either exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it, or failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it. It is intended to refer to the class of cases where the Court having jurisdiction and exercising it appears to have acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of such jurisdiction (v). The words, "acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity," have given rise to a conflict of opinion. It is therefore best first to state how much is settled law, and then to deal with the various interpretations put on the words "illegally" and "material irregularity" by the various High Courts.

It is settled law that where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a question, and it has determined that question, it cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity because it has come to an erroneous decision.—The leading case on the subject is Amir Hassan Khan v. Sh. o. Balsh Singh (u), decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1884. In that case it was laid down by their Lordships that where a Court has jurisdiction to decide the question before it and in fact decides the question, it cannot be regarded as acting in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, merely because its decision is erroneous. The mere fact that the decision of the Court is wrong affords no ground for the interference of the High Court under this section. In the course of the judgment, their Lordships said: "The question then is, did the Judges of the lower Courts in this case, in the exercise of their jurisdiction, act illegally or with material irregularity?" It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them [namely, whether the suit was barred as res judicata] and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly, they had jurisdiction to decide the case, and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity." Following this decision, it has been held that the High Court will not interfere under this section, merely because the lower Court wrongly decided that the suit was barred by limitation (x), or that it was barred as res judicata (y), or because the lower Court proceeded upon an erroneous construction of the sections of an Act (z), or misunderstood the effect of a document in evidence (a), or excluded evidence which it ought to have admitted (b) except probably in cases where it is in direct contravention of some statutory provision (c), or held, though incorrectly, that there was no relation of landlord and tenant between the parties to a suit or proceeding (d), or that no notice was necessary to be given to a railway company under s 77 of the Railways Act (e), or that an application to set aside a sale was not time-barred (f). Similarly it has been held that no revision lies from an order passed in appeal remanding a case under O 41, r 23 below (g), though such order may be erroneous in law. The cases cited above were all cases in which the Court had jurisdiction to decide the question before it, and in fact decided the question, but the decision was impeached as being erroneous in law and was sought to be revised under the present section. In all those cases the High Court held that though there was an error in law, the decision was not open to revision, on the ground that a mere error in law is not an "illegality" within the meaning of this section. In all these cases the High Court might well have said in the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in another case (h), "It [the lower Court] made a sad mistake, it is true, but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right." The point was further emphasized by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balakrishna v. Vasudera (i). Referring to this section, their Lordships said:

"It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved" (j).

The rule laid down in Balakrishna's case has been interpreted, or rather applied, differently by different High Courts. This may be explained by an illustration. A applies under O 21, r 89, to set aside a sale in execution of a decree. The lower Court places a wrong interpretation on r 89, and holds that A is not a person entitled to apply under that rule, and dismisses A's application. A then applies to the High Court for a revision of the order of the lower Court. Can the High Court interfere in revision? It has been held by the Patna High Court (l) that it can, the reason given being that the case is one of a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested by law in the lower Court, and therefore within this section. In the course of his judgment Mulla, J., said: "The Court's decision upon the point whether the applicant has the necessary legal character is clearly a question involving jurisdiction. An erroneous decision on a question of law or fact after jurisdiction has once been legally assumed would not be a ground for interference under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but if the decision is the very basis and foundation of jurisdiction in its limited sense as distinguished from powers, it at once comes within the purview of the section. The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balakrishna v. Vasudera is in my opinion authority for this view." The same view has been taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (m). These decisions have been dissented from by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court (n). In the course of his judgment Banerji, J., after referring to Balakrishna's case, said: "In the present case the Court was competent to determine whether [A] was entitled to make an application under O 21, r 89, and it had jurisdiction to decide that question, and it decided it adversely to [A]. The Court may have been

The substantial point of difference between these two divergent views is that the Patna and Madras High Courts treat the refusal by the lower Court to entertain the application as a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested it by law, while the High Court of Allahabad regards the refusal as no more than a decision, though erroneous, on a point of law in the exercise of the lower Court a jurisdiction. There is no difference of opinion between these Courts on the point that where the lower Court assumes jurisdiction or refuses jurisdiction on an erroneous construction of a statute, the High Court can interfere in revision. The difference arises on the question—is it a case of a refusal to exercise jurisdiction, or a case merely of a wrong decision on a point of law in the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction? According to the Patna and Madras High Courts, it is the former, according to the Allahabad High Court, it is the latter. Following its Full Bench ruling, the Madras High Court has held that though an erroneous decision on a point of limitation is not a ground for interference under this section, the High Court can and will interfere if the Small Cause Court refuses to entertain an application for retrial of a suit tried by a single judge of that Court, where such refusal proceeds on a wrong view of a question of limitation (n). It has similarly been held by that Court that where a District Judge on an erroneous construction of a statutory rule, assumes jurisdiction to declare whether a person elected as a President of Local Board is duly elected or not, and assuming such jurisdiction declares his election to be void, the High Court has the power to interfere under this section (o).

The same topic continued—The decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case presupposes jurisdiction in the Court whose decision is sought to be revised on the ground that it is erroneous. Hence the principle of that decision does not apply where a Court erroneously assumes a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law (p). Thus if a Court proceeding upon an erroneous construction of a section of an Act assumes a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law, the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the decree of the lower Court as one passed without jurisdiction (q). Similarly if a Court wrongly decides that a suit is of a civil nature, and entertains the suit on that basis, the decision is open to revision under clause (a) of this section for no civil Court is competent to entertain a suit which is not of a civil nature (r) see § 9 above. Likewise if a Court proceeding upon an erroneous construction of a statute or upon a misapprehension of the law declines to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, the High Court has the power to interfere under clause (b) of this section (s). These however, are cases under clauses (a) and (b) of the present section. They are not cases under clause (c) being the clause now under consideration. The reason why these cases are mentioned here is that it was contended in those cases that as the assumption of jurisdiction or the refusal to exercise it had proceeded upon an error of law, the High Court had no power to interfere under this section, and the decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case was relied upon in support of that contention. But the High Courts held that if the case came under either clause (a) or clause (b), it was immaterial that the assumption of jurisdiction or the refusal to exercise it proceeded upon an error of law. The High Courts also pointed out that the basis of the decision in Amir Hassan

Khan's case was that the lower Court had jurisdiction to determine the question before it and that it had determined it, and all that that case decided was that an erroneous decision of a case in the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction was no ground for interference under this section.

A Court has no power to dismiss a suit after the decree is passed in the suit. If it does so the question arises whether the case is one of exercise of jurisdiction not vested in the Court or one of illegality or material irregularity. In Lachmi Narain v. Balmakund (1), the Judicial Committee held that the case was one of exercise of jurisdiction not vested in the Court. In that case the High Court on appeal passed a decree by consent for a partition upon certain terms and remitted the suit to the Subordinate Judge for disposal under the decree. The plaintiff failed to appear on the day appointed by the Subordinate Judge for the matter to be proceeded with, and the Judge made an order dismissing the suit, he based his action upon O 17, r 2, and O 9 r 8. The plaintiff applied to the High Court. The High Court decided that the case came both under clause (a) and under clause (c) of this section, and they set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and ordered the case to be restored to his file. The defendants appealed from this order to the Privy Council on the ground that the High Court had no power to interfere in revision. Their Lordships affirmed the decision of the High Court and said:

Their Lordships do not think it necessary to determine that the case came under para (c) of s. 115. But they think that the order which the Subordinate Judge made was one which he had not jurisdiction to make. The order of the Subordinate Judge was not merely wrong in law, it was an order which he had no jurisdiction to make.

Other cases—No irregularity or illegality.—Beside cases of the type of Amir Hassan's case there are cases in which the action of the lower Court has been held not to amount to illegality or material irregularity, e.g., failure to give notice where none is required to be given under the Code (u) deciding a case without taking into consideration a point of law where such point was never raised before the Court (v).

What is illegality or material irregularity?—Amir Hassan Khan's case decides what an illegality or material irregularity is not. What then is an illegality or material irregularity within the meaning of this section? To find an answer to this question, the Courts have adopted Amir Hassan Khan's case as the basis. Different interpretations have been put by different Judges upon the decision in that case, and hence we have a number of conflicting views on the meaning of the words in question of which the principal ones are set forth below.—

1. That the words, 'acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity,' refer only to an error of jurisdiction, and apply only to cases of the kind contemplated by cls (a) and (b) of this section (w). As against this view it has been said that the words in question did not occur in the Code of 1877, that they were first introduced by the amending Act of 1879, that errors of jurisdiction had already been provided for by the first two clauses of the section, and that the words in question must refer therefore to something else than errors of jurisdiction (x).

2. That the said words refer to errors of procedure only as distinguished from errors of law (y). This view proceeds mainly on the word "acted." In a Calcutta case, Jenkins C.J., said: "It appears to me that section 115 can only be called in aid when the failure of justice (if any) has been due to one or other of the faults of procedure indicated in that section. If there was an error committed [by the Small Cause Court

The substantial point of difference between these two divergent views is that the Patna and Madras High Courts treat the refusal by the lower Court to entertain the application as a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested in by law, while the High Court of Allahabad regards the refusal as no more than a decision, though erroneous, on a point of law in the exercise of the lower Court's jurisdiction. There is no difference of opinion between these Courts on the point that where the lower Court assumes jurisdiction or refuses jurisdiction on an erroneous construction of a statute, the High Court can interfere in revision. The difference arises on the question—is it a case of a refusal to exercise jurisdiction, or a case merely of a wrong decision on a point of law in the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction? According to the Patna and Madras High Courts, it is the former, according to the Allahabad High Court, it is the latter. Following its Full Bench ruling, the Madras High Court has held that though an erroneous decision on a point of limitation is not a ground for interference under this section, the High Court can and will interfere if the Small Cause Court refuses to entertain an application for retrial of a suit tried by a single judge of that Court, where such refusal proceeds on a wrong view of a question of limitation (n). It has similarly been held by that Court that where a District Judge, on an erroneous construction of a statutory rule, assumes jurisdiction to declare whether a person elected as a President of Local Board is duly elected or not, and assuming such jurisdiction declares his election to be void, the High Court has the power to interfere under this section (o).

The same topic continued—The decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case presupposes jurisdiction in the Court whose decision is sought to be revised on the ground that it is erroneous. Hence the principle of that decision does not apply where a Court erroneously assumes a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law (p). Thus if a Court proceeding upon an erroneous construction of a section of an Act assumes a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law, the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the decree of the lower Court as one passed without jurisdiction (q). Similarly if a Court wrongly decides that a suit is of a civil nature, and entertains the suit on that basis, the decision is open to revision under clause (a) of this section, for no civil Court is competent to entertain a suit which is not of a civil nature (r), see § 9 above. Likewise if a Court proceeding upon an erroneous construction of a statute or upon a misapprehension of the law declines to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, the High Court has the power to interfere under clause (b) of this section (s). These, however, are cases under clauses (a) and (b) of the present section. They are not cases under clause (c) being the clause now under consideration. The reason why these cases are mentioned here is that it was contended in those cases that as the assumption of jurisdiction or the refusal to exercise it had proceeded upon an error of law, the High Court had no power to interfere under this section, and the decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case was relied upon in support of that contention. But the High Courts held that if the case came under either clause (a) or clause (b), it was immaterial that the assumption of jurisdiction or the refusal to exercise it proceeded upon an error of law. The High Courts also pointed out that the basis of the decision in Amir Hassan really arise in the case, and bases its decision of the case on a determination of that issue(n). It is also a material irregularity to treat the delivery of a summons by post to a person who was not shown to be the defendant as good service, and to pass a decree ex parte against the defendant on that footing (o), or to attach in execution of a personal decree against a defendant property which he holds as trustee for another (p), or to make an order against a person without hearing him (q). It is also a material irregularity for a Court to decline to go into evidence when required to do so, and to proceed to dispose of the suit upon the pleadings or upon allegations made in a petition (r), or to refuse to draw up its own decree, whether it be preliminary or final (s), or to refuse to grant a certificate for a refund of court fees paid on a memorandum of appeal when a case is remanded under O 41 r 23 (t) [Court Fees Act 7 of 1870, s. 13]. It is also a material irregularity to apply to a case a section of an Act which is not applicable to it (u), or to disregard the provisions of the Evidence Act and to place the burden of proof on a wrong party (v).

Wrong decision of lower appellate Court as to jurisdiction of trial Court—The question that arises under this head is whether the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere under this section where the lower appellate Court erroneously decides in the exercise of its admitted jurisdiction as an appellate Court that the Court of first instance had or had not jurisdiction to entertain a suit. Cases of this kind arise when a Court of first instance returns a plaint on the ground that it has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and the lower appellate Court affirms the order of the Court of first instance or sets aside the order. Has the High Court jurisdiction in such a case to revise the order of the lower appellate Court? It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad (w) that it has not the reason given being that if the lower appellate Court committed an error, it did so in the exercise of its jurisdiction in entertaining an appeal which it was bound to entertain. On the other hand, it has been held by a full Bench of the Madras High Court (x) that the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision with the order of the lower appellate Court, the reason given being that the Case (a), where the lower appellate Court had confirmed the order of the first Court, and the application was for the revision of the orders of both the lower Courts, the application was entertained.

Order refusing review—This section does not apply to an order of a lower Court refusing to grant a review of its decision (b)

Gross miscarriage of justice—The interference of the High Court under this section in cases where the lower Court has acted illegally or with material irregularity should be confined to cases where the illegality or irregularity was such as had occasioned or might occasion a substantial failure of justice (c). Hence the judgment of a lower Court should not be set aside upon a mere technicality (d).

Sanction to prosecute—Where a Civil or a Revenue Court, acting under s 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, grants or refuses an application to prosecute a party to the suit or witnesses before it, it is a decision of a case within the meaning of the present section. The High Court, therefore, has no jurisdiction to interfere under s 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to call for the proceedings of the lower Court under that section. But it has power under s 115 of this Code as also under section 15 of the High Courts Act [now s 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915] to call for the proceedings and to pass such order as it may deem expedient. In other words, the application in such cases lies on the civil revisional side of the High Court, and not on the criminal revisional side. But the Bench exercising criminal jurisdiction may deal with the matter, if authorized to do so by the Chief Justice under section 14 of the High Courts Act [now s 108 of the Government of India Act, 1915] (e). The rule is the same where action has been taken by a Subordinate Civil Court under s 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (f). See also the undermentioned cases (g).

Appeal—By cl 15 of the Letters Patent, as amended in March 1919, it is provided that no appeal lies from an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction. Prior to the amendment there was a conflict of decisions as to whether an appeal lay to the High Court under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of a single Judge delivered in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction under this section. The matter stood thus 'it was enacted by cl 15 of the Letters Patent, as it stood before the amendment, that an appeal shall lie to the High Court from the judgment of one Judge of the High Court or one Judge of any Division Court pursuant to s III of the Charter Act. Now s 13 of the Charter Act provides for the exercise by the Judges of the High Court of the original and appellate jurisdiction vested in the High Court. This gave rise to the question whether the division of jurisdiction into (1) original and (2) appellate was exhaustive or not. If the division was exhaustive, revisional jurisdiction must be treated as comprised in appellate jurisdiction, so that an appeal would lie under cl 15 from the judgment of a single Judge exercising revisional jurisdiction. If the division was not exhaustive, so that revisional jurisdiction was something outside the original and appellate jurisdiction, the case would not fall within s 13 of the Charter Act, and no appeal can therefore lie under cl 15 of the Letters Patent. It was held by the High Courts of Madras (k) and Calcutta (l), that the division of the jurisdiction of High Courts into original and appellate was exhaustive and that revisional jurisdiction was included in appellate jurisdiction and that an appeal therefore lay under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order of a single Judge made under the present section provided such order amounted to a judgment within the meaning of that clause. 123 [New] (1) A Committee, to be called the Rule Committee, shall be constituted at the town which is the usual place of sitting of each of the High Courts referred to in section 122

Constitution of Rule Committee in Certain Provinces

(2) Each such Committee shall consist of the following persons, namely — S.

(a) three judges of the High Court established at the town at which such Committee is constituted, one of whom at least has served as a District Judge or a Divisional Judge for three years,

(b) a barrister practising in that Court,

(c) an advocate (not being a barrister) or vakil or pleader enrolled in that Court,

(d) a Judge of a Civil Court subordinate to the High Court, and

(e) in the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, an attorney

(3) The members of each such Committee shall be appointed by the Chief Justice or Chief Judge, who shall also nominate one of their number to be president

Provided that, if the Chief Justice or Chief Judge elects to be himself a member of a Committee, the number of other Judges appointed to be members shall be two, and the Chief Justice or Chief Judge shall be the President of the Committee

(4) Each member of any such Committee shall hold office for such period as may be prescribed by the Chief Justice or Chief Judge in this behalf, and whenever any member retires, resigns, dies or ceases to reside in the province in which the Committee was constituted, or becomes incapable of acting as a member of the Committee, the said Chief Justice or Chief Judge may appoint another person to be a member in his stead.

(5) There shall be a Secretary to each such Committee, who shall be appointed by the Chief Justice or Chief Judge and shall receive such remuneration as may be provided in this behalf by the Governor-General in Council or by the Local Government, as the case may be

The words, 'the town which is the usual place of sitting of each of the High Courts referred to in section 122,' in sub sec (1) were substituted for the words, 'each of the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, Lahore and Rangoon' by the Amending Act III of 1916

124 [New] Every Rule Committee shall make a report to the High Court established at the town at which it is constituted on any proposal to annul, alter or add to the rules in the First Schedule or to make new rules, and before making any rules under section 122 the High Court shall take such report into consideration

The provisions as to Rule Committees apply to rules to be made under s 122. Rules under that section can only be made after the Chartered High Courts have taken the opinion of the Rule Committee attached to them

125 [New] High Courts, other than the Courts specified in section 122, may exercise the powers conferred by that section in such manner and subject to such conditions as, in the case of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Coorg, the Governor General in Council, and, in other cases the Local Government, may determine

Provided that any such High Court may, after previous publication make a rule extending within the local limits of its jurisdiction any rules which have been made by any other High Court

Rules under this section should not be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code. See s 128 and contrast s 129. As to sanction see s 126

126 [New] Rules made under the foregoing provisions shall be subject to the previous approval of the following authorities namely —

(a) if the rule is made by a High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, to the approval of the authority prescribed by the proviso to section 107 of the latter Act for rules made under that section,

(b) if the rule is made by any other High Court, to the approval of the Local Government

The word "approval" in the section was substituted for the word "sanction" wherever it occurred in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916

The words and figures "or the Government of India Act 1915" were inserted in the section by the Amending Act III of 1916. The words and figures "the proviso to section 107 of the latter Act" were substituted for the words and figures "section 15 of that Act" also by the Amending Act III of 1916

Sanction—This section requires in the case of rules to be made by Chartered High Courts the same sanction as is required by s 107 of the Government of India Act 1915 the object being that the rule making power should correspond with the power conferred under section 107 of that Act. That section empowers the Chartered High Courts to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and procedure of Courts subject to their appellate jurisdiction subject to the previous approval in the case of the High Court of Calcutta of the Governor General in Council and in other cases of the local Government.

127 [Ven] Rules so made and approved shall be published in the Gazette of India or in the local official Gazette, as the case may be,

and shall from the date of publication or from such other date as may be specified have the same force and effect, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court which made them, as if they had been contained in the First Schedule

The word approved was substituted for the word sanctioned by the Repealing and Amendment Act 24 of 1917, sch I

128 [New] (1) Such rules shall be not inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code, but, subject thereto, may provide for any matters relating to the procedure of Civil Courts

Matters for which rules may provide

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub section (1), such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely —

(a) the service of summonses, notices and other process by post or in any other manner either generally or in any specified areas, and the proof of such service,

(b) the maintenance and custody, while under attachment, of live-stock and other moveable property, the fees payable for such maintenance and custody, the sale of such live stock and property and the proceeds of such sale,

(c) procedure in suits by way of counter claim, and the valuation of such suits for the purposes of jurisdiction,

(d) procedure in garnishee and charging orders either in addition to, or in substitution for, the attachment and sale of debts,

(e) procedure where the defendant claims to be entitled to contribution or indemnity over against any person whether a party to the suit or not (n) ,

(f) summary procedure—

(i) in suits in which the plaintiff seeks only to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money payable by the defendant, with or without interest, arising—on a contract, express or implied , or on an enactment where the sum sought to be recovered is a fixed sum of money or in the nature of a debt other than a penalty , or on a guarantee, where the claim against the principal is in respect of a debt or a liquidated demand only , or on a trust , or

(ii) in suits for the recovery of immoveable property, with or without a claim for rent or mesne profits by a landlord against a tenant whose term has expired or has been duly determined by notice to quit or has become liable to forfeiture for non payment of rent, or against persons claiming under such tenant ,

(g) procedure by way of originating summons ,

(h) consolidation of suits, appeals and other proceedings ,

(i) delegation to any Registrar, Prothonotary or Master or other official of the Court of any judicial, quasi judicial and non judicial duties , and

(j) all forms, registers, books, entries and accounts which may be necessary or desirable for the transaction of the business of Civil Courts

129 [S 52, third para] Notwithstanding anything in this Code, any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, may make such rules not inconsistent with the Letters

Power of Chartered High Courts to make rules as to their original civil procedure

Patent establishing it to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction as it shall think fit, and nothing herein contained shall affect the validity of any such rules in force at the commencement of this Code

The italicized words were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916

Rules as to original civil procedure of Chartered High Courts—Rules made under s 122 must not be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code. Under this section any Chartered High Court may make rules to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction. Such rules may not be consistent with the provisions in the body of the Code but they must not be inconsistent with the Letters Patent establishing it. The Letters Patent here referred to are the Letters Patent of 1865 those being the Letters Patent in force when the present Code was enacted and not the Letters Patent of 1862 (o)

130. [S 652, second para] A High Court not established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, may, with the previous approval of the Local Government, make, with respect to any matter other than procedure, any

Power of other High Courts to make rules as to matters other than procedure

rule which any High Court so established might, under section 15 or section 107 respectively of those Acts, make with respect to any such matter for any part of the territories under its jurisdiction which is not included within the limits of a Presidency town

The words and figures or the Government of India Act, 1915, were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916. The words or section 107 respectively of those Acts were substituted for the word of that Act also by the Amending Act 13 of 1916

The word 'approval' was substituted for the word 'sanction' by the Repealing and Amending Act 24 of 1917, sch. I Miscellaneous.

132 [S 640] (1) Women who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court

Exemption of certain women from personal appearance

(2) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to exempt such women from arrest in execution of civil process in any case in which the arrest of women is not prohibited by this Code

See notes to O 26 r 1 - Persons exempted from attending Court

133. [S 641] (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, exempt from personal appearance in Court any person whose rank, in the opinion of such Government, entitles him to the privilege of exemption

Exemption of other persons

(2) The names and residences of the persons so exempted shall, from time to time, be forwarded to the High Court by the Local Government and a list of such persons as reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of each Court subordinate to the High Court shall be kept in such subordinate Court

(3) Where any person so exempted claims the privilege of such exemption, and it is consequently necessary to examine him by commission, he shall pay the costs of that commission, unless the party requiring his evidence pays such costs

134 [New] The provisions of sections 55, 57 and 59 shall apply, so far as may be, to all persons arrested under this Code

Arrest other than in execution of decree

This section is new It supplies an omission.

Exemption from arrest and civil process

(3) Nothing in sub section (2) shall enable a judgment-debtor to claim exemption from arrest under an order for immediate execution or where such judgment debtor attends to show cause why he should not be committed to prison in execution of a decree

1 The words "other than process issued by such tribunal for contempt of Court" in sub s (2) have been added to give effect to a Calcutta decision (n).

2 Sub section (3) is new. It has been substituted for the words "except as provided in section 337A, sub section (5) and sections 25C and 643 which occurred at the commencement of sub section (2) in the Code of 1882."

Grounds of exemption from arrest—The exemption here conferred is not for the personal benefit of the individual but for the furthering of public interests and the better administration of justice. In other words, the exemption is not the privilege of the person attending the Court but that of the Court which he attends. If therefore, a witness does not believe bona fide that his attendance was required, there is no privilege (q). For the same reason where a writ of attachment for contempt of Court has been issued against a party to a suit he cannot claim privilege from arrest while proceeding to Court for the purpose of attending the hearing of the suit (r).

While going to or attending and while returning from Court — A party to a suit is exempt from arrest under this section while going to or attending the Court before which the suit is pending and while returning from such Court. The following are the leading cases bearing on this part of the section —

(1) Where a plaintiff who was a native of Patna and who had instituted a suit in the High Court of Madras at Patna on receiving a letter from his solicitors that his presence was required and arrived at Madras on 24th October, and the suit having come on for hearing on the 27th of October was adjourned till the 2nd of December, and he was arrested in execution of a decree against him on the 10th of November.

This section does not apply to proceedings in execution—S 647 of the Code of 1882 as it stood when that Code was first enacted, ran as follows —

The procedure herein prescribed shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals "

The question arose under that section whether the words "proceedings other than suits and appeals" included proceedings in execution, in other words whether that section had the effect of rendering the provisions of the Code relating to suits applicable to proceedings in execution of a decree. On the one hand, it was held by the High Courts of Allahabad (d) and Bombay (e) that that section applied to applications for execution of decrees so that the procedure relating to suits was to be applied to applications for execution. On the other hand it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that that section did not apply to proceedings in execution (f). In this state of authorities the Legislature intervened and an Explanation was added into the section by the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act 6 of 1892, which ran as follows —

Explanation—This section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits

The effect of the above Explanation was to supersede the Allahabad and Bombay rulings above referred to, and to give legislative sanction to the Calcutta decision

In the meantime one of the Allahabad cases referred to above, namely, the case of Fakirullah v. Thakur Prasad (g), was taken up to the Privy Council, and that tribunal held in the year 1894, that independently of the Explanation, s 647 did not apply to applications for execution but only to original matters in the nature of suits, such as proceedings in probates, guardianships, and so forth, thus overruling the Allahabad and Bombay cases (h). This decision if it had come three years earlier, would have rendered the Explanation unnecessary. Now that we have got the Privy Council decision and the rule firmly established that s 647 does not apply to proceedings in execution the Explanation is unnecessary, and it has accordingly been omitted in the present section (i). At the same time two alterations have been made in the section, namely, (1) the words 'in regard to suits' have been added and (2) the words 'other

5. 141. than suits and appeals" have been omitted. In so doing the Legislature has now done what it could have done as well in 1892.

The reason why the words "other than suits and appeals" which occurred at the end of s 647 have been omitted in the present section is this: S 647 applied to proceedings "other than suits and appeals." The High Court of Allahabad held that applications for the execution of decrees were proceedings "other than suits and appeals" and that s 647 applied therefore to such applications (j). On the other hand, the High Court of Calcutta held that applications for the execution of decrees were not proceedings "other than suits and appeals," they being proceedings in suits, and that s 647 did not

It would have been a shorter cut if the Legislature had amended s 647 by deleting the words 'other than suits and appeals,' as those were the words that gave rise to the conflict, instead of adding into the section an Explanation which certainly was not happily worded. What the Legislature omitted to do in 1892 it did in 1908.

This section, we have said, does not apply to proceedings in execution (i). Hence the procedure provided in the Code in regard to suits does not apply to applications for execution of decrees. We proceed to note the decisions on the subject:—

1 The provisions of s 11 relating to res judicata in regard to suits do not apply to applications for the execution of decrees. But though these provisions do not in terms apply to applications for execution, they are governed by principles analogous to those of res judicata. See notes to s 11, p 63 above.

2 The provisions of O 2, r 2 [Code of 1882, s 43] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence where a decree awards two distinct reliefs, an application to enforce one relief is no bar to a subsequent application to enforce the other relief, though both reliefs are awarded by the same decree (m).

3 The provisions of O 9 [Code of 1882, ss 96 to 109] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence if the applicant fails to appear at the hearing of the application, the Court cannot dismiss the application under O 9, r 8 [Code of 1882, s 102], though it may do so under its inherent power (n). And where in the exercise of this power has once been dismissed for default, such dismissal is no bar to a fresh application for execution (p). See notes to O 9, r 9 and O 9, r 13 "Execution proceedings."

4 The provisions of O 17, rr 3 [Code of 1882, ss 157-159] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence an order dismissing an application for default is no bar to a fresh application for execution (q).

5 The provisions of O 23, r 1 [Code of 1882, s 373] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence the withdrawal of an application, though it be without the leave of the Court, is no bar to a fresh application for execution (r). See now O 23, r 4.

"Proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction—The proceedings spoken of in this section refer to original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probate guardianship and so forth, and do not include execution (s) An application under s 18 of the Religious Endowments Act 1863, is a proceeding of this nature Hence it must be verified as required by O 6 r 15 of the Code (t) But an application for settlement of rents made to a Revenue Officer under s 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 is not a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction Hence the petition need not be signed as required by O 6 r 14 (u) A petition by a company to the High Court under the Indian Companies Memorandum of Association Act, 1890 for the confirmation of a special resolution altering the Memorandum of Association of the Company is a proceeding within the meaning of this section Therefore where the petition was dismissed, and the Company applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council the case was dealt with by the Court under s 595 of the Code of 1882 [now s 109] (v) Similarly an application to set aside an ex parte payment order made under the Indian Companies Act 6 of 1882 is a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction Hence the provisions of O 9, r 13 apply to the case (w) An application under s 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, is a proceeding in a Court of Civil jurisdiction Hence a receiver may be appointed in such a proceeding under O 40, r 1 (z) But an application for a succession certificate under the Succession Certificate Act 1889, is not such a proceeding Hence a receiver cannot be appointed under O 40 in such a proceeding (y) An application for the appointment of a Common Manager under s 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 is a proceeding of the kind contemplated by this section, a receiver therefore may be appointed under O 40, r 1, pending the application (z) Disciplinary proceedings taken under s 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act 18 of 1879 are not proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction within the meaning of this section, therefore the procedure provided by s 24 of the Code does not apply to those proceedings (a) An application under para 17 of Schedule II to file an agreement to refer to arbitration comes within this section, hence where an application is made under that para, the applicant may join several causes of action in the application as provided by O 2 r 3 below (b) An inquiry before a Commissioner appointed by a Court to ascertain the amount of mesne profits payable by one party to another is a proceeding within the meaning of this section Hence the provisions of O 18, r 1, apply to the proceeding (d)

"The procedure provided in this Code"—This section extends the procedure provided in this Code as regards suits to proceedings in civil Courts It does not confer any substantive right not expressly given elsewhere by the Code, e g, a right of appeal (e) Hence no appeal lies from an order passed on a proceeding of the kind contemplated by this section unless the order comes within the purview

Restitution—The word "restitution" in this section means restoring to a party what he has lost in execution of a decree passed against him on the decree being varied or reversed in appeal. The granting of restitution is not discretionary. The principle of the doctrine of restitution is that on the reversal of a decree in appeal the law raises an obligation in the party to the suit who received the benefit of the erroneous decree to make restitution to the other party for what he has lost (h). The decree of reversal necessarily carries with it the right to restitution of all that has been taken under the erroneous decree, and the Court in making restitution is bound to restore the parties, so far as they can be restored, to the same position they were in at the time when the Court by its erroneous action had displaced them from it (i).

The doctrine of restitution contemplates the case where property has been received by a decree holder in execution of a decree, and the decree or part thereof is subsequently varied or reversed on appeal by the judgment debtor. In such a case, the procedure to be adopted by the judgment debtor is to apply under this section to the Court of first instance for restitution of the property and for consequential relief. On such application being made, the Court shall cause restitution to be made to the judgment debtor (the successful appellant). The restitution to be made must be such as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for the decree appealed from or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed (j). This principle applies with equal force whether restitution has or has not been directed in the appellate decree (k). For the purpose of making such restitution as aforesaid, the Court may make any orders, including orders for the refund of costs (l), and for the payment of interest (m), damages (n), compensation and mesne profits (o), which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal. In directing restitution it is to be noted that the parties must be placed in the same position as they were previously in irrespective of any other rights accruing to any of them during the litigation (p). Where an order is made against a party for restitution, but restitution is not made, the order may be enforced by sale of his property [s. 36] (q).

It is to be observed that the restitution to be awarded under this section must be "properly consequential" on the reversal of the decree. The Court may therefore in a proper case refuse to make an order for the refund of costs (r).

(2) A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5,000, and recovers the amount in execution. The decree is subsequently reversed in appeal. B is entitled on an application under this section to a refund of the money together with interest up to the date of repayment, though the appellate decree may be silent as to interest. see the cases cited in foot note (m) above. In Rodger v Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (s), which is the leading case on the subject, Lord Cairns, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, observed as follows: "It is contended on the part of the respondents here [that is, A in the present illustration] that the principal sum being restored to the present petitioners [that is B in the present illustration], they have no right to recover from them any interest. It is obvious that, if that is so, injury, and very grave injury, will be done to the petitioners. They will, by reason of an act of the Court, have paid a sum which, it is now ascertained, was ordered to be paid by mistake and wrongfully. They will recover that sum after a lapse of a considerable time, but they will recover it without the ordinary fruits which are derived from the enjoyment of money. On the other hand, these fruits will have been enjoyed, or may have been enjoyed, by the person who by mistake and by wrong obtained possession of the money under a judgment which has been reversed. So far, therefore, as principle is concerned, their Lordships have no doubt or hesitation in saying that injustice will be done to the petitioners and that the perfect judicial determination, which it must be the object of all Courts to arrive at, will not have been arrived at unless the persons who have had their money improperly taken from them have the money restored to them with interest during the time that the money has been withheld." These observations apply equally to mesne profits which form the subject of the next illustration.

(3) A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain immovable property and in execution of the decree obtains possession of the property. The decree is subsequently reversed in appeal. B is entitled to possession of the property together with mesne profits during the period of dispossession. see the cases cited in foot note (o) on p 339. If the property has in the meantime been let out by A to tenants, B is entitled to remove any tenant who refuses to vacate. Rohini Singh v Hodding (1894) 21 Cal 340.

Splitting of claim for restitution—It has been held by the High Courts of Patna and Madras that the provisions of O 2 r 2, do not apply to a proceeding under this section. A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain immovable property, and recovers possession of the property pursuant to the decree. B appeals from the decree, and the decree is reversed in appeal. B then applies for restitution of the property, and the property is restored to him. Subsequently B applies for mesne profits for the period during which A was in possession of the property. Is B debarred from claiming mesne profits on the ground that he ought to have included the claim for mesne profits in the application for restitution of the property? No. (t). Similarly, a judgment debtor who applies for and obtains restitution of a sum of money on reversal by the appellate Court of the decree pursuant to which he had paid the sum to the decree holder is not precluded from making a fresh application for recovery of interest for the period during which the decree holder had the use of the money (u).

Inherent power to grant restitution—The power of a Court to grant restitution is not confined to the cases covered by the provisions of this section. It extends also to cases which do not come strictly within this section. The reason is that a Court has an inherent right under s. 151 irrespective of this section to order restitution (t).

In Jai Berham v. Kedar Nath Marwari (u), their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "It is the duty of the Court under s. 144 of the Civil Procedure Code to place the parties in the position which they would have occupied, but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed." Nor indeed does this duty or jurisdiction arise merely under the said section. It is inherent in the general jurisdiction of the Court to act rightly and fairly according to the circumstances towards all parties involved. As was said by Cairns, L.C., in Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (x): "One of the first and highest duties of all Courts is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors and when the expression the act of the Court is used, it does not mean merely the act of the primary Court, or of any intermediate Court of Appeal but the act of the Court as a whole from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter up to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case." In Jai Berham's case a sale in execution of a decree was set aside on the ground that the sale certificate comprised property different from that which was attached. The property was purchased by a stranger to the decree, and the price paid by him into Court was applied towards satisfaction of the decree. The judgment debtor applied for possession. Their Lordships held that both under s. 144 and s. 151 the purchaser was entitled to be paid the excess of the purchase price over the mesne profits. This decision, it is submitted is an authority for the proposition that where an application for restitution does not come strictly within the purview of this section, e.g., where the sale alone is set aside in execution proceedings, but the decree is not "varied or reversed," or where the decree and the sale are set aside in a separate suit, the Court may entertain the application under the inherent power conferred upon it by s. 151. If this view be correct it will be needless for the Courts in future to resort to s. 47, which can only apply if the decree holder himself is the purchaser, or, where the purchaser is a stranger to the decree, he is regarded as a "representative" either of the decree holder or of the purchaser within the meaning of that section. It is also submitted that a proceeding under this section is not a proceeding in execution.

In the exercise of their inherent power the Courts have applied the principle of this section to cases which were not strictly within the terms of the section. Thus where A sued B to establish his right to a fund in Court, and B was allowed to draw the money on giving an undertaking to the Court to repay it if A succeeded in the suit, and A succeeded in establishing his title, it was held that though the undertaking given by B did not provide for the payment of interest, the Court had inherent power to order B to repay the money with interest (y). See notes below, "Where a decree is varied or reversed."

"Place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree as has been reversed"—A party is not entitled under this section to restitution of property which was not in his possession before suit, but was in possession of the opposite party, and which therefore could not have been taken out of his possession under any decree of Court. A applies for letters of administration

B delivers the properties to a Commissioner appointed by the Court who locks them up in a room under seal. The High Court directs probate of the will to be granted to B. Thereafter on B's application the moveables are handed over to her. Subsequently the order of the High Court is reversed by His Majesty in Council, and letters of administration are directed to be granted to A. A then applies under this section for restitution of the properties to him. A is not entitled to restitution. The case is not one of restitution at all, for A was never in possession of the properties (z).

Who may apply for restitution.—Any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise may apply under this section.

(1) If here decree proceeds on a common ground.—The expression "any party" is not confined to parties to the appeal in which the decree has been reversed or modified. It includes every person against whom the decree appealed from was passed, though he was not a party to the appeal, provided the appeal is in effect and substance in favour of such person (a). This would especially be the case where the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants (b). see O 41, r 4. A obtains a decree against B and C. The decree proceeds on a ground common to both B and C. B alone appeals from the decree. The decree is reversed in appeal. C is entitled to claim restitution under this section, though he was not a party to the appeal.

(2) Transferee of a decree.—Further, the expression "any party" includes the transferee of a decree passed in appeal. A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5,000. B appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal A realizes from B Rs 5,000 in execution. The decree is subsequently reversed in appeal. B assigns the decree passed in appeal (in his favour) to C. C is entitled, as transferee of B's decree, to the benefit of that decree and he may apply under this section for an order directing A to pay to him what B would be entitled to, namely, Rs 5,000 and interest (c).

(3) Auction Purchaser.—A sale in execution of a decree may be set aside in a proper case even against a purchaser who is a stranger to the decree either in execution proceedings or in a separate suit, e.g., where the sale certificate comprises property different from that which is attached (d), or when a decree is obtained on a mortgage executed by a Hindu father on behalf of himself and his minor son, and the decree and the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree are set aside in a suit by the minor against the decree holder and the auction purchaser on the ground that the mortgage did not bind the minor (e). But the auction purchaser is entitled in such cases, before restoring possession to the judgment-debtor, to be paid the purchase price by the successful judgment debtor less the mortgage profits, if the sale is set aside in execution proceedings, under this section (f), and, if the sale is set aside by a decree in a separate suit, under O 47 or s. 151 (g). It has been held by the High Court of Rangoon that an auction purchaser who is not a party to the original suit or to the appeal or to the execution proceedings is not entitled to apply under this section (7).

Against whom restitution may be claimed :—

A.

(1) Transferee of decree reversed in appeal—In two Allahabad cases decided under the old section it was held that restitution could not be claimed by application under that section against the transferee of a decree reversed in appeal, though the transferee had obtained the full benefit of the decree by execution unless he was joined as a party to the appeal (i) The point of the decision may be explained by an illustration A obtains a decree against B, and assigns the decree to C C applies for execution of the decree against B and obtains payment of the decretal amount B appeals from the decree, and the decree is reversed in appeal It was held under the old section that B could not claim restitution against C by summary process under that section unless C was joined as a party to the appeal (j) Those decisions might perhaps be supported on the ground that where a party sought restitution under the old section, he had to proceed by an application to execute the decree passed on appeal and that a decree cannot be executed against persons who are not parties to it The language of the present section is much wider, and it is submitted that the Court has power under this section to order C to make restitution to B on an application by the latter in that behalf, even if C was not joined as a party to the appeal [See also s 146 It is worth noting that according to the same High Court, B could not claim restitution against C even by way of suit, the reason given being that B could have no cause of action in such a case against C But this decision has been dissented from by the High Court of Madras (k)

(2) Auction purchaser—Except in cases of the kind mentioned in case (j) under the heading Who may apply for restitution, restitution cannot be obtained under this section against a bona fide purchaser for value at an auction sale held by a Court which had jurisdiction to sell the same (l) It is otherwise however where the decree holder himself is the purchaser (m) See notes to s 63, Effect of reversal of decree upon sale p 192 above

(3) Surety—This section applies only to the parties or their representatives and does not apply to sureties Hence restitution cannot be claimed under this section against a surety (n)

Sub-section (2): bar of suit—This sub section is new It provides in express terms that where restitution could be obtained by application under this section no separate suit shall be brought in respect of it The decisions under the Code of 1852 were not uniform it having been held in some cases that a separate suit for restitution was barred, and in others that it was not (o)

S. 144. ence to execution The position of the section has also been changed, it being transferred from the chapter headed 'Of appeals from original decrees' to Part IX headed 'Miscellaneous'. A separate suit is now barred by the express terms of the section and the application for restitution is no longer one for execution of the appellate decree. The Court is empowered to make such order as it deems proper for restitution and the order if not obeyed, may be enforced as a decree (p) [see s. 36].

It must be observed that the suit that is barred under this section is a suit to obtain restitution, compensation or other relief which could be obtained by application under this section, further the compensation to be awarded under this section must be consequential on the variation or reversal of a decree. It follows that if the compensation claimed is not consequential on such variation or reversal a separate suit for such compensation will not be barred under this section (q).

Decree—An order for rateable distribution made under s. 73 is not a decree within the meaning of this section (r).

Where a decree is varied or reversed—The old section applied only where the decree of reversal was a decree passed in first appeal, or where, by virtue of s. 587 [now s. 108] it was one passed in second appeal. It was held not to apply where restitution was claimed on the reversal of a decree in appeal to the Privy Council (s) or in review (t). This was because the words of that section were, 'when a party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise under a decree passed in an appeal under this chapter', that is, chapter 41 relating to appeals from original decrees.

As regards the present section there is a difference of opinion. According to one view the section applies in all cases where a decree is varied or reversed, however the variation or reversal is effected, even though it be in a separate suit, and by whatever Court (u). According to another view, the section does not apply unless the decree is varied or reversed by a Court superior to the one that passed it. This view is based on the ground that the words 'Court of first instance' in this section are used to distinguish the Court which is to grant the restitution from some other Court which has varied or reversed the decree (v). The point of difference between these two views is brought out by the following—

Illustration

A obtains an ex parte decree against B in Court X. In execution of the decree a house belonging to B is sold by Court X and it is purchased by A. Subsequently on B's application the ex parte decree is set aside by Court X. B then applies to Court X for an order against A for restoring possession of the house to him. According to the former view Court X may direct restitution under this section though the decree was both passed and set aside by that Court (w). According to the latter view restitution cannot be ordered under this section (x) but the Court may grant restitution under s. 151 (y) or under s. 47 (z).

Does this section apply where the decree is neither varied nor reversed but the sale alone is set aside as under O. 21 r. 92? It has been held that it does not but that the Court may in such a case grant restitution in the exercise of its inherent power under s 151. Thus where A obtained a decree against B and in execution of the decree purchased certain property belonging to B and took possession of it and the sale was subsequently set aside under O 21 r 92 and possession restored to B it was held on an application by B for mesne profits that there being no decree that was set aside this section did not apply but that the Court may in the exercise of its inherent power direct A to pay mesne profits to B during the period A was in possession of the property (a).

See notes above. Inherent power to grant restitution

The Court of first instance—In a suit for ejectment under the Agra Tenancy Act 2 of 1910 [local] the Court of first instance is the Peshawar Court which heard the suit and not the Court of Appeal (b).

Jurisdiction of Court under this section—Suppose the damages claimed in lieu of restitution exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which an application is made under this section. Has the Court power to award those damages? It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that it has (c).

Is a proceeding under this section a proceeding in execution?—An application for execution under s 583 of the Code of 1882 was held to be one by way of execution (cc). There is a conflict of opinion whether a proceeding under this section is a proceeding in execution. It has been held by the High Courts of Madras (d) and Bombay (e) that it is while it has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (f) and Patna (g) that it is not. This distinction is important in the following respects:—

- (1) If an application under this section is one by way of execution it would be governed by art 182 of Sch I of the Legislation Act and further s 11 of that Act relating to the exclusion of the period of minority would apply to the application (h). If it is not it would be governed by art 181 (i) [applications for which no period of limitation is prescribed].
- (2) If an application under this section is one by way of execution the provisions of s 141 would not apply to it [see notes to s 141]. But they would if it is not one by way of execution. In the latter case if the application is dismissed for default it may be restored under O 21 r 11 (j).
- (3) The difference between the two views also affects the Court fee on a memorandum of appeal from an order passed under this section (k). See notes below. Court fee. See also notes above. Splitting of claim for restitution.

Limitation—See notes above. Is a proceeding under this section a proceeding in execution?

Applicability of s 141—See notes above. Is a proceeding under this section a proceeding in execution?

Appeal—The determination of a question under this section is a decree and appealable as such (n) sec s 2 cl (2) definition of decree But the question must be one directly covered by the section, and not one incidentally connected with or collateral to the decision of any such question Thus a decision that an application under this section is time barred is a decision on a question collateral to the question of limitation and hence it is not a decree and not appealable as such (o)

Court-fee—It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that an appeal from an order made on an application under this section requires to be stamped ad valorem under the Court Fees Act 1870 sch I, art 1 as an appeal from a decree This proceeds on the view taken by that Court that an application under this rule is not an application for execution (p)

145 [S 253] Where any person has become liable as surety—

- (a) for the performance of any decree or any part thereof, or
- (b) for the restitution of any property taken in execution of a decree, or
- (c) for the payment of any money, or for the fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person, under an order of the Court in any suit or in any proceeding consequent thereon, the decree or order may be executed against him, to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable, in the manner herein provided for the execution of decrees, and such person shall, for the purposes of appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of section 47

Provided that such notice as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety

The old section—The corresponding s 253 of the Code of 1832 ran as follows —

Whenever a person has before the passing of a decree in an original suit become liable as surety for the performance of the same or of any part thereof the decree may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself liable in the same manner as a decree may be executed against a defendant

Provided that such notice in writing as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety

- 1 The old section applied only to surety bonds for the performance of a decree. It did not apply to surety bonds for the fulfilment of a condition imposed upon a person under an order of the Court [see cl. (c) of the present section]. It was also doubtful whether the old section applied to suretyships for the restitution of property taken in execution of a decree [see cl. (b) of the present section]. The present section applies not only to surety-bonds for the performances of a decree, but also to surety bonds referred to above as also to bonds for the payment of money under an order of the Court. See notes below.
- 2 The present section applies to suretyships for the performance of any decree whether original or appellate [see cl. (a)]. As to the old section it was doubtful whether it applied to original decrees only or applied also to appellate decrees.
- 3 The word "personally" has been newly added in the present section.

Object of the section—This section provides that where a person has become liable as surety for the performance of a decree or for any of the purposes specified in cl. (b) and (c), the party for whose benefit security has been given may enforce the security by executing the decree or order against the surety, to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable, in the same manner as if the surety was a party to the decree or order and was directed by the decree or order to perform the obligation undertaken by him. It is no longer necessary to institute a regular suit to enforce the security as it was in some cases under the old section. The present section provides a summary remedy in execution, and dispenses with the necessity of a separate suit to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable.

1 Ex parte decree — A obtains an ex parte decree against B. The decree is set aside.

1 Ex parte decree—A obtains an ex parte decree against B. The decree is set aside under O 9, s 13 [Code of 1952, s 108] on C standing security for the performance of any decree that may be passed against B on a rehearing. The suit is reheard and a decree is passed against B. A may enforce the security by executing the decree against C. (9) A separate suit is not necessary.

2 Appellate decree—The summary procedure contemplated by this section applies to suretyships for the performance of any decree whether it be an original or an appellate decree. Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the summary remedy provided by that section applied at all to suretyships for the performance of appellate decrees it being held by the High Court of Calcutta that it did not (r) and by the other High Courts that it did (s). The present section makes it clear that the summary procedure contemplated by this section applies to surety given for the performance of appellate decrees also. The rules that provide for security for the performance of appellate decrees are rules 3 and 6 of Order 41 (here pending) 303 and 416 of the Code of 1882. An illustration will make the point clear. I obtain a decree against B and apply for execution. B appeals from the decree and applies for stay of execution under O 41, r 5. Execution is stayed in the meantime security for the due performance of any decree that may be passed against B in appeal. A decree is eventually passed by the

- S 145. appellate Court against B. A may enforce the security against C by executing the appellate decree against him as if C was a party to the decree. According to the Calcutta decisions under the old section, A's only remedy was by way of suit against C.

Security for restitution of property taken in execution of a decree.—A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain lands. B appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal A applies for execution of the decree. The Court allows execution on C standing surety for the restitution of the lands to B in the event of the decree being reversed in appeal, or for payment to B of the value of the property [O 41, r 6, Code of 1882, s 546]. The decree is eventually reversed in appeal. B may enforce the security by executing the appellate decree against C. According to the Calcutta decisions under the old section, B could only enforce the security by a separate suit (f).

Security for the payment of money.—The following are some of the sections and rules providing for security for the payment of money —

S 55, sub s (4) [security on behalf of a judgment-debtor who is arrested in execution of a decree and who expresses his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent]

O 23, r 1 [security for costs]

O 38, r 2 [security in cases of arrest before judgment]

O 39, r 5 [security in cases of attachment before judgment]

O 41, r 10 [security for costs of respondent in first appeal]

O 45, r 7 [security for costs of respondent in appeal to the King in Council]

Security for fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person.—The summary remedy provided by the old section applied only where the security given was for the performance of a decree and for no other purpose. Thus where a defendant produced certain promissory notes in Court, and the plaintiff objected to their return to the defendant, but they were returned to him on C standing surety for their production when required, it was held that the plaintiff could not, on non production of the notes, proceed against C by execution, the reason given being that the security was not given for the performance of a decree, and that his remedy was by way of suit only against C (u). Under the present section the security may be enforced by execution against C.

Though the language of this section is considerably wider than that of the old section, the section applies only when the Court passes an order or decree which is intended to be an order or decree enforceable through execution by a party to a suit or other proceeding against another party thereto. A bond, therefore, passed by a surety under O 32, r 6 (2), cannot be enforced by summary process under this section, it can only be enforced by a suit (v). See notes to O 21 r 43, "Security bond for producing attached property."

A is committed to jail in execution of a decree obtained against him by B. A applies to be released from jail to enable him to make an application in insolvency with a view to his protection from arrest. A is released from jail under s 55 (4) on C standing surety for the production of A on a particular day. The insolvency application fails, and it thereupon becomes incumbent upon C to produce A before the Court. If C fails to do so, B, and not the Government, is entitled to the security money (w). The money is to be appropriated towards satisfaction of the decree, it is not to be given to the decree holder as a solatium or further benefit over and above the decretal amount (x).

"To the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable."—A surety (1) may render himself personally liable, or he (2) may only give a charge upon his property, or he (3) may undertake a personal liability and charge his property as further security

The provisions of this section apply to the first case, the personal security given by the surety security may be enforced by attachment and sale of his property

This section does not apply to the second case In Raghubar Singh v Jas Indra Bahadur Singh (y), their Lordships of the Privy Council said "In the course of the judgments in India s 145 was referred to, but whatever might have been its effect if the sureties had been personally liable, it has no application now that their Lordships have construed the instrument as giving only a charge upon property" In that case the plaintiff obtained a decree for possession against the defendant The defendant appealed from the decree The plaintiff was on his application let into possession in execution of the decree upon furnishing security The security was furnished by s who entered into a bond whereby he hypothecated his property The bond was passed to the Court, no obligee was named in the bond It was contended on behalf of the surety that the bond could only be enforced by a suit under O 34, r 14 [Transfer of Property Act, s 90], but this contention was overruled, and it was held that the proper order to make was that the property charged be sold unless before a day named the surety found the money This was the procedure adopted by the Allahabad High Court in an earlier case, being the case of Janak Kuar v Sarup Ram (z), and it was approved by their Lordships The same principle has been applied to security bonds passed in similar terms by the judgment debtor himself (a)

In the third case also the hypothecated property may be brought to sale without a suit (b), unless the surety has in the meantime transferred his equity of redemption in the property to a third person in which case a suit must be brought against the transferee and the surety to enforce the security (c)

Notice to surety—The notice required to be given to a surety under this section is a condition precedent to the validity of an order for execution against him An attachment issued without such notice is illegal (d) When a decree is sent by the Court which passed the decree to another Court for execution, the notice required by this section may be given by the latter Court (e) For form of notice see App II form No 13

This section does not bar a regular suit against a surety—As to the old section it was held that it gave an additional, not an exclusive, remedy against a surety, and that it did not prevent the decree holder from bringing a regular suit on the surety bond to enforce the security (f) Nor does the present section bar a regular suit (g) It simply enables a party for whose benefit security has been given to enforce the surety bond against the surety by way of execution to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable, and no more If the party for whose benefit security has been given proceeds against the surety in execution, the surety is to be deemed for the purposes of appeal a party within the meaning of s 47 That is to say, if an order is made in execution enforcing a claim against the surety the surety may appeal from the order as if he was a party to the suit in which the decree or order sought to be executed was passed (h). In this respect the section gives effect to certain rulings under the old section (i). But the reference to s 47 does not import into this section the provision therein contained which bars a separate suit.

A surety under this section is a party to the suit within the limited purpose mentioned in this section. Hence if he seeks to set aside the bond on the ground of fraud or undue influence, he cannot proceed by an application under this section but must bring a regular suit (j).

Appeal—An order under this section is appealable as a decree (k). See the penultimate paragraph of the section.

Limitation—Where an appeal has been preferred from a decree for the performance whereof a person has become liable as a surety, the period of limitation for an application under this section is 3 years from the date of the appellate decree as provided by art 182 cl. (2) Schedule I of the Limitation Act and not 3 years from the date of the original decree (l).

146 [New] Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him.

Proceedings by or against representatives

Proceeding by or against representatives—The proceeding contemplated by the section includes an appeal. The expression claiming under is wide enough to cover cases of devolution etc. mentioned in O 2 r 10. A sues B to establish his right to certain property. Pending the suit B mortgages the property to C. The suit is decided in A's favour. B does not appeal from the decree. C as a person claiming under B may appeal from the decree (m).

See notes to O 9 r 13 under the head Application by legal representative of deceased defendant. Other cases to which the section applies have been considered in their proper place.

147 [New] R S C, O 16 r 21 In all suits to which any person under disability is a party, any consent or agreement, as to any proceeding shall, if given or made with the express leave of the Court by the next friend or guardian for the suit, have the same force and effect as if such person were under no disability and had given such consent or made such agreement.

"Any person under disability"—The section applies to consent given on behalf of persons under disability, such as minors and lunatics. See O 32 below.

"As to any proceeding"—These words do not refer to the conduct of a suit or appeal. A next friend or guardian ad litem has undoubtedly the conduct of a suit or appeal in his hands. But if he does anything in the action beyond the mere conduct of it, e.g., consents not to appeal, the person under disability is not bound by it unless it is done with the express leave of the Court (n).

"Express leave"—The leave must be express. In this respect the present section differs from the English rule.

148. [New. R. S. C., O. 64, r. 7.] Where any period is fixed or granted by the Court for the doing of any act prescribed or allowed by this Code, the Court may, in its discretion, from time to time, enlarge such period, even though the period originally fixed or granted may have expired

Enlargement of time

"Act prescribed or allowed by this Code"—The present section empowers the Court to extend any time fixed by it even after the expiry of the period originally fixed. It is legislative recognition of the rule laid down in the Bombay case of Bhagwan Das v. Haji Abu Ahmed (o), and the cases on which the same was based (p). In the Bombay case it was held that it was competent to the Court to extend the time fixed under s. 54 of the Code of 1852 [now O 7, r. 11] even after the expiry of the time originally granted. It must, however, be noted that the section applies only where time is fixed for the doing of an act prescribed or allowed by this Code. Code includes rules, and prescribed means "prescribed by the rules [see s. 2, cl. (1) and (16)]. See, for instance the following rules—

- 1 O 6, r. 18 (amendment of pleadings)
- 2 O 7, r. 11 (b) [requiring plaintiff to correct valuation of suit]
- 3 O 7 r. 11 (requiring plaintiff to supply requisite stamp paper, where the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped)
- 4 O 8, s. 9 (requiring written statement or additional written statement from a party)
- 5 O 21, r. 17 (amendment of application for execution)
- 6 O 23, r. 2 (security for costs of suit)
- 7 O 41, r. 10 (security for costs of appeal)

Act directed or allowed by a decree of Court—This section does not apply where time is allowed for doing an act by a decree of Court (q). It was accordingly held by the Allahabad High Court in Saranjan v. Ram Bahal (r) that a Court has no power under this section to extend the time fixed by its decree under O 20, r. 14 for payment of purchase money in a suit for pre-emption. The Allahabad decision has been approved by the Madras High Court (s). The High Court of Patna has, however, held that the Court has power under this section to extend the time fixed by a decree passed under O 20, r. 14 (t). The attention of the Patna Court was not drawn to the

But if he does anything in the action beyond the mere conduct of it, e.g., consents not to appeal, the person under disability is not bound by it unless it is done with the express leave of the Court (n)

"Express leave"—The leave must be express. In this respect the present section differs from the English rule

148. [New. R. S. C., O. 64, r. 7.] Where any period is fixed or granted by the Court for the doing of any act prescribed or allowed by this Code, the Court may, in its discretion from time to time, enlarge such period, even though the period originally fixed or granted may have expired

Enlargement of time

"Act prescribed or allowed by this Code"—The present section empowers the Court to extend any time fixed by it even after the expiry of the period originally fixed. It is legislative recognition of the rule laid down in the Bombay case of Bhagwan Das v. Haji Abu Ahmed (o), and the cases on which the same was based (p). In the Bombay case it was held that it was competent to the Court to extend the time fixed under s. 34 of the Code of 1892 [now O 7, r. 11] even after the expiry of the time originally granted. It must, however, be noted that the section applies only where time is fixed for the doing of an act prescribed or allowed by this Code. 'Code' includes rules, and prescribed means "prescribed by the rules" (see s. 2, cl. (1) and (16)). See, for instance, the following rules—

- 1 O 6, r. 18 (amendment of pleadings)
- 2 O 7, r. 11 (b) [requiring plaintiff to correct valuation of suit]
- 3 O 7, r. 11 (requiring plaintiff to supply requisite stamp paper, where the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped)
- 4 O 8, r. 9 (requiring written statement or additional written statement from a party)
- 5 O 21, r. 17 (amendment of application for execution)
- 6 O 25, r. 2 (security for costs of suit)
- 7 O 41, r. 10 (security for costs of appeal)

Act directed or allowed by a decree of Court—This section does not apply where time is allowed for doing an act by a decree of Court (q). It was accordingly held by the Allahabad High Court in Saranjan v. Ram Bahal (r) that a Court has no power under this section to extend the time fixed by its decree under O 20, r. 14 for payment of purchase money in a suit for pre-emption. The Allahabad decision has been approved by the Madras High Court (s). The High Court of Patna has, however, held that the Court has power under this section to extend the time fixed by a decree pronounced under O 20, r. 14 (t). The attention of the Patna Court was not drawn to the Allahabad decision In a later case, however, the Allahabad High Court held that where an ex parte decree is set aside on condition that the defendant should pay a certain sum of money to the plaintiff within a certain time, and such payment is not made, the Court has power under this section to enlarge the time for payment. As to Saranjan's case the Court observed that it related to a decree in a suit for pre-emption (u). In a recent case, however, where a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff conditional upon her paying an extra court fee of Rs. 20 within a week, but the amount was not paid within that period, the High Court of Allahabad held that the Court had no power under this section to extend the time, but that the plaintiff might proceed by an application for a review under s. 114 read with O. 47, r. 1. The Court said "There is no distinction between a pre-emption decree and any other decree which embodies certain conditions and provides for the suit being dismissed if those conditions are not complied with" (v). However that may be, it is beyond all doubt that the section does not give any Court power to interfere with or modify its decree after there has been an appeal filed from the decree (w). See notes below, "Court to which, etc."

An application for extension of time fixed by the decree in a redemption suit for payment of the mortgage debt does not fall under this section, but under O. 34, r. 8 (z).

Period of limitation—This section does not empower a Court to extend the period prescribed by the law of limitation (y).

Consent order—Where the time for doing an act has been fixed by a consent order, it cannot be enlarged except by consent (z).

Court to which application should be made for extension of time—Where a decree is passed against a defendant requiring him to execute a labial in favour of the plaintiff within two months, and an appeal is preferred from the decree, the only Court that has power to extend the time, assuming the case is one under this section, is the Appellate Court, and not the Court which passed the decree (a).

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order under this section. The order is not a decree, nor is it one of the appealable orders mentioned in s. 104 (b).

149. [New.] Where the whole or any part of any fee prescribed for any document by the law for the time being in force relating to court-fees has not been paid, the Court may, in its discretion, at any stage, allow the person, by whom such fee is payable, to pay the whole or part, as the case may be, of such court-fee, and upon such payment the document, in respect of which such fee is payable, shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance.

Scope of the section.—This section is new. It is an enabling section. It empowers the Court to allow a party to make up the deficiency of court fees payable on plants, memoranda of appeal, applications for review of judgment, etc., even after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the filing of these documents. The section enables a defective document to be retrospectively validated if the insufficiency of the stamp is subsequently made up with the leave of the Court. It must, however, be noted that the power to make up the deficiency of court fees is subject to the discretion of the Court and is not claimable as of right by a party (c). See notes below "Appeals and applications for review of judgment."

Plaints—As to the case where a plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped see notes to O 7, s 11, under the head "Clause (c)."

Appeals and applications for review of judgment—As to these it was provided by s 582A of the Code of 1882 as follows—

"If a memorandum of appeal or application for a review of judgment has been presented within the proper period of limitation, but is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the insufficiency of the stamp was caused by mistake on the part of the appellant or applicant as to the amount of the requisite stamp, the memorandum of appeal or application shall have the same effect and be as valid as if it had been properly stamped provided that such appeal or application shall be rejected unless the appellant or applicant supplies the requisite stamp within a reasonable time after the discovery of the mistake to be fixed by the Court."

The above section was introduced into the Code of 1882 by Act 4 of 1892 to supersede a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court. That ruling was to the effect that if a memorandum of appeal is not, when tendered, properly stamped, it is not at that time a memorandum of appeal and the subsequent affixing of the proper stamp cannot have a retrospective effect so as to validate the original presentation unless it has been done by order of the Court, and such order can only be made where the defective memorandum has been received through a mistake on the part of the Court or its officers, and not where the insufficiency of the stamp was caused by a mistake on the part of the appellant (d).

S 582A applied only to appeals and applications for a review. S 582A has been omitted in this Code, and the present section has been enacted which is quite general in its terms. It applies to all documents chargeable with court fees under the Court fees Act, such as plaints, memoranda of appeal or of cross objections, applications for review of judgment, and written statements pleading a set off, or counter claim. At the same time the words, "and the insufficiency of the stamp was caused by mistake on the part of the appellant or applicant as to the amount of the requisite stamp," which occurred in s 582A have been omitted in the present section. There is therefore no reason to restrict the concession provided for by this section to cases where there is a bona fide misunderstanding of the law as to valuation as it was under s 582A. It has accordingly been held by the High Court of Bombay that the fact that an appellant has no funds with which to pay the requisite stamp is a good ground for admitting the memorandum of appeal, though presented on the last day of limitation and for extending the time under this section to pay the requisite stamp (e). According to the Patna High Court, the Court should not give time to make good the deficiency if a litigant has deliberately and to suit his own convenience paid an insufficient court fee. Time, according to that Court, may be given when the amount of the court fee payable is open to

Ss doubt, or the amount of the court fee cannot be ascertained by the Court till the record is received, or it appears that he has made an honest attempt to comply with the law (f) The Lahore High Court has taken a similar view (g)

The present section, as stated above applies to all documents chargeable with court fees, such as plaints, memoranda of appeal, applications for review, etc. As regards plaints it is well settled that in the case of a plaint insufficiently stamped the Court is bound under O 7, r 11 (c) [s 54 of the Code of 1882] to give time to the plaintiff to make good the deficiency, even if the plaintiff has deliberately and without any excuse paid an insufficient court fee, provided the plaint is presented within the period of limitation. As regards appeals however there is a difference of opinion. The High Court of Bombay (h) has held that a memorandum of appeal stands on the same footing as a plaint, and that just as in the case of a plaint insufficiently stamped the Court is bound to give time to the plaintiff to make good the deficiency, so in the case of a memorandum and in effect that it should be read subject to the provisions, in the case of plaints, of O 7, r 11 (c), and in the case of appeals, of O 7, r 11 (c) coupled with s 107 (2). On the other hand it has been held that it should be read subject to the provisions, in the case of

is open to doubt, or the amount of the fee cannot be ascertained by the Court till the record is received or it appears that the appellant has made an honest attempt to comply with the law, but that it should not allow time if the appellant has deliberately and to suit his own convenience paid on his appeal insufficient court fee. According to that Court, the present section should not be construed in such a way as to nullify the

Revision—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that an order refusing to give time to a party to make up the deficiency in court fee is not capable of revision as such an order does not amount to a decision of a "case" within the meaning of s 115 of the Code (m)

"Save as otherwise provided."—O 9, r 13, provides that where an ex parte decree is passed against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside. Suppose now that an ex parte decree is passed by Court P for possession of certain immovable properties, and subsequently part of its territorial jurisdiction including the locality in which the properties are situated is transferred to Court A. Has Court A power under this section to entertain an application to set aside the decree under O 9, r 13? It has been held by the High Court of Madras that it has, O 9, r 13, does not say that the Court that passed the decree is the only Court that can set it aside (n).

"Transferred"—It has been held by the High Court of Madras that the word "transferred" in this section is not confined to cases of transfer of business of one Court to another, but includes cases where a new Court is given part of the territorial jurisdiction of an old Court and is authorized to try all the business arising within it (o). The High Court of Calcutta has held differently (p).

See notes to s 37 above. See also the undermentioned cases (q).

151. [New.] Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court

Saving of inherent powers of Court

Inherent powers of Court—The Code of Civil Procedure is not exhaustive (r). The Court has therefore in many cases, where the circumstances require it, acted upon the assumption of the possession of an inherent power to act ex debito justitiæ and to do that real and substantial justice for the administration, for which alone it exists (s). The law cannot make express provisions against all inconveniences so that their dispositions shall express all the cases that may possibly happen, and it is therefore the duty of a Judge to apply them not only to what appears to be regulated by their express provisions, but to all the cases to which a just application of them may be made and which appear to be comprehended either within the express sense of the law or within the consequences that may be gathered from it (t). At the same time it is to be remembered that a Court has no inherent power under this section to do that which is prohibited by the Code. Thus a Court has no power after the judgment is signed to alter or add to it, as to do so would be in direct contravention of the provisions of O 20, r 3 (u). Further, this section does not invest the Court with jurisdiction over matters which are excluded from its cognizance. Thus a Court cannot under this section entertain a suit relating purely to caste questions, such a suit not being one of a civil nature (v) see s 11 above. Nor can the Court ignore the provisions of the law of limitation by appealing to this section (u). Inherent jurisdiction must be exercised subject to the rule that if the Code does contain specific provisions which would meet the necessities of the case in

151. question, such provisions should be followed and the inherent jurisdiction should not be invoked (x) A Court cannot make use of the special provisions of this section, where the applicant has his remedy provided elsewhere in the Code and has neglected to avail himself of it (y) And, further, no order should be made under this section unless it is necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court (z) At the same time it is to be noted that this section does not become applicable in every case in which there is no other remedy (zz) In Saburi v Sat: (a), the High Court of Calcutta dismissed an appeal under II 41, r 10, which provides that upon a failure to comply with an order for security for costs the Court shall dismiss the appeal On appeal to the Judicial Committee it was contended that the Court had inherent power under this section to give the appellant an opportunity of making an application for leave to continue the appeal in forma pauperis Referring to this contention their Lordships said 'A further point is taken, that s 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, preserves the inherent powers of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice, and to this general saving section appeal is made to take the case out of the operation of the orders and rules, if they are applicable to Letters Patent appeals How far a mere general saving clause gives power in effect to refuse to apply an appropriate rule, made in the exercise of other powers of the Court and having statutory force, is another question, but for present purposes it is enough to say that in the terms of the section the inherent powers saved are such as are used to secure the ends of justice' In the end their Lordships came to the conclusion on the materials before them that justice did not require that the appellant should be assisted in prosecuting the appeal before the High Court, and they confirmed the order of the High Court But where the ends of justice do require it, the Court has an inherent power to make such order as it may deem proper It has thus been held that although the Code contains no express provision on the matters hereinafter mentioned the Court has an inherent power—

- (a) to consolidate suits and appeals (b) including appeals to His Majesty in Council (c),
- (b) to postpone the hearing of suits pending the decision of a selected action (d),

152. [New. R. S. C., O. 28, r. 11. Cf. S. 206.] Clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees or orders, or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission, may at any time be corrected by the Court either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties.

Amendments of judgments, decrees or orders

Amendment of decrees and orders—This section has been taken from O 28, r. 11, of the Rules of the Supreme Court

There are two and only two cases in which the Court can amend or vary a decree or order after it is drawn up and signed, namely —

- (i) under its inherent powers, when the decree or order does not correctly state what the Court actually decided and intended, and
- (ii) under this section, where there has been a clerical or arithmetical mistake, or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission

If a decree or order is sought to be amended or varied in any other case, it can only be done by a review of judgment under O 47, r 1, or by an appeal under s 90 (g) It is doubtful whether a decree or order can be varied even by consent of parties after it is drawn up and signed (h), see O 20, r 3

Inherent power to amend decrees and orders—Every Court has an inherent power to vary or amend its own decree or order so as to carry out its own meaning In so doing it does nothing but exercise a power to correct a mistake of its ministerial officer by whom the decree or order was drawn up (i) It only insists that the decree drawn up in the office of the Court should correctly express the judgment given by the Court (j) “It would be perfectly shocking if the Court could not rectify an error which is really the error of its own minister” (l) “I cannot doubt,” said Lord Penzance in Laurie v. Lees (l) “that under the original powers of the Court independent of any order that is made under the Judicature Act, every Court has the power to vary its own orders which are drawn up mechanically in the office of the Court—to vary them in such a way as to carry out its own meaning, and where language has been used which is doubtful, to make it plain I think that power is inherent in every Court” In Hutton v. Harris (m), Lord Watson said “When an error of that kind has been committed, it is always within the competency of the Court, if nothing has intervened which would render it inexpedient or inequitable to do so, to correct the record in order to bring it into harmony with the order which the Judge obviously meant to pronounce”

It will be seen from the above that the Court has no power to vary or amend its decree where it is in conformity with the judgment (n), not even if the judgment is erroneous in law (o) though the error be apparent on the face of the judgment (p)

A decree has been defined in s 2 as the formal expression of an adjudication which completely determines the rights of the parties with regard to the matter in contro-

[In the above case the amendment was necessary for the decree as drawn up did not contain any direction to A to convey to B the properties come to B's share but declared only that A was entitled to specific performance.]

(3) A sues B and C for Rs 5 000. The judgment awards Rs 5 000 to A as prayed (i.e. as against B and C). The decree is drawn up so as to render the amount payable by B alone. The decree may be amended and brought into conformity with the judgment. Chathappan v Pydel (1892) 15 Mad 403. Phera sha v Sun Mills Ltd (1898) 22 Bombay 370

"Accidental omission.—This section enables the Court to correct errors arising from an accidental omission. Thus where directions as to costs were inadvertently omitted the decree was set right by adding the directions (r). Similarly where the date from which payments ordered to be made were to run was inadvertently omitted, the decree was perfected by adding the date (s).

"Accidental slip.—A bona fide error as to the amount of interest due to the defendant may be corrected under this section (t). And so also an error as to the period for which an injunction is to continue (u).

"May."—In a recent case the High Court of Calcutta said. The word 'may' in the section does not make it discretionary with the Court to order the amendment but merely enlarges the power of the Court by providing that such correction may be made at any time or in other words the section simply emphasizes that no lapse of time would disentitle the Court to make the correction (i). The correct view it is submitted is the one taken by the High Court of Allahabad namely, that under this section Revision.—A decision under this section granting an application for amendment is an order and not a decree. The decision may therefore be the subject of revision under s 115, but it cannot be the subject of an appeal (j). It has been so held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Allahabad and Bombay in cases under the corresponding s 206 of the Code of 1882. A different view has been taken by the High Court of Madras. According to that Court, where a decree is amended, the aggrieved party has the right to appeal from the decree as amended. Hence if no appeal is preferred within the period of limitation, he cannot afterwards apply for a revision of the order allowing the amendment (k).

Where a case is one of "accidental slip" within the meaning of this section, but the Court which passed the decree refuses to amend it on the ground that the case does not fall under this section, the refusal amounts to a failure to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Court within the meaning of s 115, and the High Court has power to interfere in revision (l). Similarly where the lower Court amends a decree in a case in which according to its own view the amendment should be refused, stating as a reason for the amendment that it was bound under this section to bring the decree into conformity with the judgment, the High Court is entitled to interfere in revision under s 115 (c) of the Code (m).

Does not apply—Where the order as drawn up represents the real decision of the Court, the Court has no jurisdiction to rehear or alter it (a) "Even when the order has been obtained by fraud, the Court has no jurisdiction to rehear it. If such a jurisdiction existed it would be most mischievous" (c)

Consent-decree—Where a decree founded on a compromise does not embody the true terms of the compromise, the only remedy is by an independent suit to set aside the decree either on the ground of mistake or fraud or some other ground ex vi sua generis with it (p). See notes to s 96, "Procedure for setting aside consent-decrees," on p 265 above.

Successive applications for amendment.—Res judicata.—See notes to § 11, "Applications for amendment of decree," on p. 70 above

Code of 1882, s. 206.—The third paragraph of s. 200 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows:—

"If the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment, or if any clerical or arithmetical error be found in the decree the Court shall, of its own motion or on that of any of the parties, amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment or to correct such error. Provided that reasonable notice has been given to the parties or their pleaders of the proposed amendment."

The above paragraph enabled the Court to amend its decree in the following two cases, namely —

- (1) Where the decree was at variance with the judgment, and
- (2) Where any clerical or arithmetical error was found in the decree

The present section corresponds with the second part of the above paragraph. The first part of the paragraph which empowers the Court to amend its decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment has been omitted. An application to amend a decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment must now be made to the Court in the exercise of its inherent power. This power has been saved by s 151

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order directing an amendment either under the Code (g) or under the Charter (r). In a case however, where the whole method of calculation adopted by the first Court was challenged in the plaintiff's application, which purported to be an application under s 152, and the first Court allowed the amendment, it was held that the order allowing the amendment must be regarded as one made under O 47, and that the order was therefore appealable (s).

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that though no appeal lies from an order of amendment, an appeal would lie from the amended decree (t).

153. [New R. S C., O. 28, r 12] The Court may at any time, and on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it may think fit, amend any defect or error in any proceeding in a suit, and all necessary amendments shall be made for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on such proceeding

General power to amend

R. S C., O 28, r 12—This section is new. It is taken from the Rules of the Supreme Court O 28 r 12. The words, 'in a suit' after the word proceeding do not occur in the English rule.

Scope of the section—O 6 r 17, is confined to amendments of pleadings, and s 152 to correcting errors in judgments, decrees or orders. The present section confers a general power on the Court to amend defects and errors in any proceeding in a suit and to make all necessary amendments for the purpose of determining the real question at issue between the parties to the suit. This power is vested in the original as well as the appellate Court (u). In Australian Steam Navigation Co v Smith and Sons (v) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "Their Lordships are strong advocates for amendment whenever it can be done without injustice to the other side and even where they have been put to certain expense and delay, yet if they can be compensated for that in any way it seems to their Lordships that an amendment ought to be allowed for the purpose of raising the real question between the parties."

"Any proceeding in a suit"—The following are some of the cases in which the corresponding English rule has been applied—

Answers to interrogatories—Where it was admitted by the defendant a solicitor, in answer to interrogatories that his partner had paid into the banking account of the firm money received by the latter for investment the defendant was allowed to amend the answer it being shown that the admission had been made by mistake (w). In another case where the defendant charged the plaintiff (his manager) with misconduct and the plaintiff exhibited interrogatories of which the substance was to ask the defendant to specify the acts of misconduct in which he relied it was said by The Chief J. J. that if the defendant answered the interrogatories and it was subsequently discovered by Appeal—No appeal lies from an order directing an amendment either under the Code (q) or under the Charter (r). R S C., O 28, r 12—This section is new. It is taken from the Rules of the Supreme Court, O 28, r 12. The words "in a suit" after the word "proceeding" do not occur in the English rule.

Scope of the section—O 6, r 17, is confined to amendments of 'pleadings,' and s 152 to correcting errors in 'judgments, decrees or orders.' The present section confers a general power on the Court to amend defects and errors in any proceeding in a suit and to make "all necessary amendments" for the purpose of determining the real question at issue between the parties to the suit. This power is vested in the original as well as the appellate Court (u). 154. [S. 3, third para] Nothing in this Code shall affect any present right of appeal which shall have accrued to any party at its commencement.

Saving of present right of appeal

Any present right of appeal—There is a conflict of decisions as to the meaning of the words "any present right of appeal" which occur in this section. According to the Chief Court of the Punjab, the words "any present right of appeal" refer to a right which had actually come into existence at the commencement of this Code by virtue of the decree or order sought to be appealed from having been passed before this Code came into force (b). According to the Madras High Court, those words refer to a right which had become vested in a litigant before this Code came into force (c). Thus there are cases in which a second appeal lay under the old Code from certain orders made in execution (the orders being treated as decrees), while no such appeal lies under the present Code. According to the Chief Court of the Punjab, no second appeal would lie in such a case from the order made in first appeal unless the latter order was made while the old Code was in force. According to the Madras High Court, a second appeal would lie if the first appeal from the order made by the Court of first instance was preferred when the old Code was in force, though the order made in first appeal was not made until after the new Code came into force (d). Similarly there are cases in which an appeal was allowed from certain orders under the old Code from which no

According to the Chief Court of the Punjab, case unless the order was made when the old Code was in force. According to the Madras High Court, it would seem that an appeal would lie if the suit in which the order was made was instituted when the old Code was in force. THE FIRST SCHEDULE.

ORDER I.

Parties to Suits.

O.1, r. 1. 1. [S. 26, R. S. C., O. 16, r. 1.] All persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where, if such persons brought separate suits any common question of law or fact would arise.

Scope of the Order—This order deals with joinder of parties, and, to a certain extent, with joinder of causes of action (f) O 2, r 3, deals exclusively with joinder of causes of action. Rule 4 of this Order is to be read with rule 1

General rules—Before considering the present rule it may be as well to note the general rules relating to the joinder of parties and of causes of action. According to the Code the essentials of a suit are—(1) opposing parties, (2) a subject in dispute, (3) a cause of action, and (4) a demand of relief (g) [see O 7, r 1] All these essentials must concur in every suit properly framed. Order 1 deals with the joinder of parties. Order 2 deals with the frame of suits. In framing a suit the following three kinds of "misjoinder" must be guarded against—

(i) Misjoinder of plaintiffs—Where there are more plaintiffs than one, the provisions of the present rule apply. This rule relates to the joinder of plaintiffs. It provides in effect that two or more persons may be joined as plaintiffs in one suit if the right to relief alleged to exist in each plaintiff arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or of fact. If not, they cannot be joined as plaintiffs in one suit, and they must bring separate suits. If two or more persons are joined as plaintiffs in one suit in a case not covered by O 1, r 1, the result is a misjoinder of plaintiffs. The objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, if not, it will be deemed to have been waived [O 1, r 13]. Where such objection is taken, and the Court finds that it is well founded, the Court should not dismiss the suit [O 1, r 9] but the plaint may be amended [O 6, r 17] by striking out the names of such persons as have been improperly joined as plaintiffs [O 1, r 10, sub r (2)], and the suit may then be proceeded with [O 1, r 9]. In other words, an objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs is not fatal to the suit (h)

(ii) Misjoinder of defendants—Where there are more defendants than one, the provisions of rule 11 of this Order apply. That rule relates to the joinder of defendants. It provides in effect that two or more persons may be joined as defendants in one suit if the right to relief alleged to exist against each of them arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or of fact. If not, they cannot be joined as defendants in one suit, and separate suits must be brought against them. If two or more persons are joined as defendants in one suit in a case not covered by O 1, r 3, the result is a misjoinder of defendants. As in the case of plaintiffs, so in the case of defendants, the objection on the ground of misjoinder should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity; if not, it will be deemed to have been waived (O 1, r 13). Where such objection is taken, and the Court finds that it is well founded, the Court should not dismiss the suit (O 1, r 9), but the plaint may be amended (O 6, r 17) by striking out the names of such persons as have not been properly joined as defendants [O 1, r 10, sub r (2)], and the suit may then be proceeded with (O 1, r 9). In other words, an objection on the ground of misjoinder of defendants is not fatal to the suit.

(h) Jankinath v Ramrunjun (1879) 4 Cal. 945.

(iii) Misjoinder of causes of action—As to the meaning of "cause of action," see notes to s 20 under the head "cause of action," p 90 above. A misjoinder of causes of action may be coupled with a misjoinder of plaintiffs or it may be coupled with a misjoinder of defendants. There may again be a misjoinder of claims founded on several causes of action. Accordingly, this subject may be considered under the following three heads—

(a) Misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action—Where in a suit there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action, the plaintiffs should be jointly interested in all the causes of action. If the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in all the causes of action, the case is one of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action. O 2, r 7, read with O 1, r 1, forbids such a misjoinder. The objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity (O 2, r 7). As to the procedure to be followed in the case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, see notes to O 2, r 3, "Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action." See also s 99 above.

(b) Misjoinder of defendants and causes of action: Multifariousness—Where in a suit there are two or more defendants and two or more causes of action, the suit will be bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, if different causes of action are joined against different defendants separately (O 2, r 3, and O 1, r 3). Such a misjoinder is technically called multifariousness. The objection on the ground of multifariousness should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity (O 2, r 7). As to the procedure to be followed in the case of multifariousness, see notes to O 2, r 3, "Procedure in case of multifariousness." See also s 99 above.

(c) Misjoinder of claims founded on several causes of action—See O 2, rr 4-5.

Non-joinder of parties—Where a person who is a necessary party to a suit is not joined as a party to the suit, the case is one of non-joinder. A suit should not be dismissed on the ground of non-joinder (i). The objection for non-joinder should be taken before the first hearing (O 1, r 13), and the plaint may be amended by adding the omitted party either as plaintiff or as defendant, bearing in mind that no person can be added as a plaintiff, though he may be added as a defendant, without his consent (i). See notes to O 1, rr 9 and 13.

Relation of this rule to O 2, r 3—O 2, r 3, is to be read subject to the provisions of this rule (j).

Changes effected in the law.—We now turn to rule 1 of Order 1. Before considering it in detail, we may observe that under the corresponding s 26 of the Code of 1852, all persons could be joined in one suit as plaintiffs, provided that the right to relief, alleged to exist in each plaintiff, arose from the same cause of action. The present

(i) Maphahala v Amhanna (1890) 21 Mad 373. [(j) Amarendra Nath v Brajendra Nath (1915) 45 Cal 111 411 C 944]

1, r. 1. rule is much wider. It is a reproduction, almost verbatim, of O 16, r. 1, of the English rules. It enables several plaintiffs, though they have separate causes of action, to join in one suit, if—

(1) the right to relief, alleged to exist in each plaintiff, arises out of the same act or transaction, and

(2) there is a common question of law or fact.

The expression "act or transaction" used in this rule is more comprehensive than the expression "cause of action" used in the old section, for the same act or transaction may give rise to different causes of action, as when several persons are injured by the same act of negligence on the part of a railway company. Under the old section such persons could not join as plaintiffs in one suit, the causes of action being different. Under the present rule, it seems, they can, as the right to relief arises out of the same act.

"All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, in respect of the same cause of action."

The decisions on the meaning of "cause of action" in the old section were not uniform. In some cases it was held that the expression "cause of action" meant facts constituting the infringement of a right plus facts constituting the right itself (i), while in others it was held that it referred to facts constituting the infringement of the right, but not necessarily also those constituting the right itself (i).

The following are some of the cases decided under the old section. It was held in those cases that the plaintiffs could not all join in one suit and that they should bring separate suits. Under the present rule, it is submitted the plaintiffs may in each one of the following cases all join in one suit—

1 In Aldridge v Barrow (m), the defendant, the editor and proprietor of a newspaper, published articles which referred to the "Calcutta Police," without naming individuals. The plaintiffs, six of the members of the Calcutta Police Force, jointly sued the editor for damages, alleging that the articles were directed against them, and that they constituted a libel. Here the libel was in the same words, and in the same documents, but of different persons. It was held that the plaintiffs could not all be joined in one suit. The Court said "It is true that the injury may have been caused by one of the defendant, as, for instance, in the case of a railway accident causing injury to several passengers, or, as is here alleged, of a collective libel on individuals. The cause of action of the persons injured will be different. There cannot in such cases be said to be one."

2 In Rajjo Kuar v Dobi Dial (n), the debts were owing by the same debtor, jointly executed by the debtor in favour of the plaintiffs, but the plaintiffs were not all jointly with intent to defeat their claims. It is conceived that in such a case the creditors can join in one suit on the ground that they are all creditors in behalf of themselves and the debtor.

¶ In Varajlal v Raudat (o) A and B were assaulted by C at an interview in C's house. A and B jointly sued C for damages for assault. It was held that the assault on A and that on B constituted two distinct causes of action and the suit was therefore bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs. The Court said: "We may go further and say that as the blows on each plaintiff were inflicted at the same time and place and must be proved by the same evidence it would be more convenient if the law permitted the trial of the two suits together than that it should be necessary to try them separately. But this is a matter for the consideration of the Legislature."

4 In Al-Serafi v Beadon (p) thirteen firemen who were engaged on board a steamer were all arrested under one warrant on a charge of desertion and they were all tried together and sentenced to one month's imprisonment. The term of imprisonment expired on 5th May but they were not released on that date. Thereupon all the thirteen brought a suit against the superintendent of the jail for damages for wrongful detention. It was held that the causes of action were distinct and separate and could not be joined in one suit.

5 In Ramanja v De-anayala (q) several trustees of a temple were removed from the office of trustee by the District Temple Committee. A suit by the trustees for a declaration that the removal was without just cause was held to be bad for misjoinder on the ground that the dismissal of each trustee gave rise to a distinct cause of action.

New Rule—In all the cases cited above it was held that the plaintiffs having distinct causes of action they could not join in one suit and that the proper course for them was to bring separate suits. The present rule is intended to meet those cases. In such cases therefore the above five plaintiffs may now all join in one suit. The present rule enables several persons to join as plaintiffs in one suit though the causes of action may be separate and distinct provided that

(1) the right to relief alleged to exist in them arises out of the same act or transaction and

(2) the case is of such a character that if such persons brought separate suits inconvenience or injustice would result.

But the condition must be satisfied to enable two or more persons to join as plaintiffs in one suit. The two conditions are of a legal nature.

According to the Allahabad decisions, they could not (a). according to the Madras and Calcutta decisions, they could (b). Under the present rule, there is no doubt that such persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs

A succeeds to B's estate by inheritance, and assigns a portion thereof to C. D is in possession of the estate, and disputes A's right of succession to it. A and C may under the present rule jointly sue D for recovery of possession of the portions of the estate to which they are entitled, as their claims in respect thereof are based on a common ground. It does not matter that A claims by right of inheritance and C under an assignment from A. Both the conditions required by the rule are present in the case.

Further, having regard to the comprehensive language of this rule, there is no objection to plaintiffs suing in a double capacity if the conditions prescribed by this rule are complied with. Thus where plaintiffs were trustees of a house part of which was let out by them and the rest occupied by them as tenants, and they sued both as trustees and tenants for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing a nuisance, it was held that there was no objection to their suing as trustees to protect the reversion and as tenants to enjoy the property free from the nuisance (c). See notes below "Jointly."

"Any right to relief"—The words 'any right to relief' are wider than the words 'the right to any relief' which occurred in the old section (d).

"Severally"—Where a right to relief in respect of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist in two or more persons severally they may join as plaintiffs in one suit or they may at their option bring separate suits. The rule does not require that they should join as plaintiffs in one suit. A Hindu priest raises a masonry structure upon a certain platform round a sacred tree, on which every member of the community has an individual right to perform religious rites. Here every member of the community has individually a cause of action and any one member may therefore sue the priest for the removal of the structure. But it is not necessary that all the members should join as plaintiffs in one suit. They may so join if they choose, but the law does not say that they should all so join (e). The same rule applies when two or more persons are entitled to the same relief in the alternative—see notes below, under the head 'in the alternative'. The rule, however, is different when two or more persons are jointly entitled to the same relief in respect of a transaction.

Jointly—Where two or more persons are jointly entitled to the same relief in respect of a transaction they must all join as plaintiffs in one suit. Thus if A, B and C are joint owners of a property they must all be joined as plaintiffs in a suit to recover the property (f). So in a suit to recover joint family property, all the members of the joint family must as a general rule be joined as plaintiffs (g). In a suit to recover trust property all the trustees must join as plaintiffs (h). In a suit to recover the estate of a deceased person all the executors who have proved the will of the deceased must be joined as plaintiffs (i). If any one of them does not consent to join as plaintiff he may be joined as a defendant [r 10 sub r (2)]. The proper course is first to ask him to join as

A Hindu dies leaving a widow, an adopted son, and a separate brother. A dispute arises between the widow and the adopted son on the one hand and the brother on the other as regards certain lands. The widow and the adopted son allege that the lands form part of the estate of the deceased. The brother on the other hand, alleges that the lands belong to him. If the widow does not dispute the adoption, a suit may be brought by her and the adopted son as co plaintiffs against the brother to recover the property from him for the plaintiffs are jointly interested in disproving the defendant's title (k). But what if the adoption is not admitted by the widow, and she asks the Court to decide the question of adoption as between her and the adopted son, and prays that if the adoption is proved the property may be delivered to the adopted son, or that it may be delivered to her, if the adoption is not proved? In such a case, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit by the widow and the adopted son as co plaintiffs to recover the property from the brother is defective on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs for the plaintiffs having antagonistic claims it cannot be said that the right to relief exists jointly in them (l).

* In the alternative.—If in the case put above, the adoption is disputed not by the widow, but by the brother, a suit may be brought by the widow and the adopted son as co plaintiffs against the brother claiming in the alternative to recover the property for the widow if the adoption is not valid, or for the adopted son if the adoption is valid (m). Here there is no misjoinder of plaintiffs for the validity of the adoption is not disputed by the co plaintiff as in the preceding case, but by the defendant. See O 1, r 4 (a), below.

Power of Court to order separate trials

This rule contemplates the case where a suit has been brought by several plaintiffs, in respect of the same act or transaction but where the causes of action are so distinct that it may not be convenient to dispose of them at one trial (n). In such a case the Court may put the plaintiffs to their election as to which of them should proceed with the suit or order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient. 3. [S 28, (Y R S C, O 16, r 4)] All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise

Who may be joined as defendants

Misjoinder of defendants—This rule is the converse of rule 1. It deals with joinder of defendants. See notes to O 1, r 1. 'Misjoinder of defendants,' on p 366 above. Rule 4 of this Order is to be read with this rule.

Relation of this rule to O 2 r 3—O 2, r 3 is to be read subject to the provisions of this rule (p)

Jurisdiction—This rule contains a provision as to joinder of parties. It assumes the existence of a suit in a proper forum, the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit. If the Court has such jurisdiction then this rule may come into play. Hence if in a suit brought against two defendants A and B, the Court has jurisdiction against A but none against B, this rule does not confer jurisdiction upon the Court to try the suit against B also merely because the conditions of this rule are satisfied (q)

All persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, in respect of the same matter

In some cases under that section it was said that the expression "same matter" was equivalent to "same cause of action," in others that it was equivalent "to same act or transaction."

New Rule—Under the present rule all persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist where if separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or fact would arise. A plaintiff is entitled under this rule to join several defendants in respect of several and distinct causes of action subject to the discretion of the Court to strike out one or more of the defendants on the analogy of O 1, r 2, if it thinks it right to do so (r). Whatever the law may have been at the time when Smythwaite v Hannay (s) was decided, joinder of parties and joinders of causes of action are discretionary in this sense, that, if they are joined, there is no absolute right to have them struck out, but it is discretionary in the Court to do so if it thinks right (t). As a general rule where claims against different parties involve or may involve a common question of fact bearing sufficient importance in proportion to the rest of the action to render it desirable that the whole of the matters be disposed of at the same time, the

1 A, riding in an omnibus belonging to B, is injured by a collision between the omnibus and a cart belonging to C. A sues B and C for damages for personal injury charging the defendants jointly with joint negligence and alternatively charging separate negligence against each defendant. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants, because the injury to the plaintiff arose from the same transaction or series of transactions and the case involves common questions of fact (t). It is otherwise, if the injury arises from distinct acts as in the next illustration.

2 A sued B for damage done to his house by B's negligence. B denied negligence and alleged that the damage was caused by the negligence of C. Thereupon A applied for an order to join C as defendant. Held that the order could not be made. Collins, L.J. said: "When we analyse this case, we find we are dealing with it upon the assumption that the two acts which were done—the one by [B] and the other by [C]—are entirely disconnected torts, each of them a separate injuria—if it be injuria at all—quite distinct one from the other. The one was done recently by [B] by excavation, and the other at a much earlier date by [C, a water company] by allowing water from its main to weaken the soil in front of the plaintiff's property." Thompson v London County Council (w). Sadler v Great Western Railway Company (x). Referring to these two cases Scrutton L.J. said in Payne v British Time Recorder Co (y) that neither of them would now be decided in the way they were. In that case P entered into a contract with B Co. to supply them with certain printed cards which should conform to certain specimens supplied to him by them. In order to carry out that contract P entered into a contract with W Co. to supply him with the cards, and paid for them. The cards were duly sent to B Co., but B Co. refused to accept them on the ground that they did not conform to the specimens. P sued B Co. and W Co. claiming as against B Co. the price of the goods sold and in the alternative as against W Co. damages for breach of contract in not supplying the cards in accordance with the specimens. It was held that as there was a common question of fact to be tried, namely, whether the cards were in accordance with the specimens supplied, the Court would in the exercise of its discretion allow the two defendants to be joined in one action.

3 W mortgages certain property to X. After X's death I claiming to be the adopted son of X sues W on the mortgage, and a consent decree is passed in the suit. Subsequently B, alleging that she is the sister and heir of X, sues I and W (1) for a declaration that the adoption of I was not validly made and (2) that the consent decree (to which she was not a party) is not binding on her. Held by the High Court of Bombay that the suit is bad for misjoinder (z). This decision, it is submitted is wrong and it has been disented from by the Calcutta High Court (a).

4 The mere fact that the relief claimed against the several defendants differs in detail is no ground for objection that the suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants, provided that the suit against the defendants is in respect of the same act or transaction. A applies for shares in a Company on the faith of a prospectus. The shares are allotted to him and he pays up Rs. 5,000 thereon. A then sues the Company and the directors alleging that the prospectus was false and calculated to mislead, claiming as against the Company cancellation of the allotment to him of 100 shares and the return of Rs. 5,000 with interest, and as against the directors Rs. 5,000 by way of damages. Here the relief claimed against the Company is rescission and repayment of the purchase money with interest and that claimed against the directors is damages. The fact that the relief claimed against the two sets of defendants differs in detail does not render the suit bad for misjoinder of defendants for the suit is in respect of one transaction, namely the issue of a false and fraudulent prospectus. In substance the shareholder has one grievance, call it a cause of action or what you like, and in substance he has one complaint, and all the persons he sues have according to him been guilty of conduct which gives him a right to relief in respect of that one thing which they have done, namely the issuing of a prospectus. The remedy is different as against the several defendants but not so much in substance as in form. (b) See r. 5 below.

5. A is an exporter of frozen meat. B is the owner of a line of steamers. By a contract between A and B, B agrees to carry from Argentina to Europe frozen meat in steamers belonging to him or in other suitable steamers. It is subsequently agreed that frozen meat should be shipped by A on a steamer called the Deion procured by B and belonging to C. Meat is accordingly shipped on the Deion and the master of the Deion signs a bill of lading in respect of it and hands it to A. A sues B and C in respect of damage to the meat alleged to have been caused by the unseaworthiness of the Deion, claiming against B on the terms of the before mentioned contract and against C upon the bill of lading. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants. (c)

6. A sues B, C, D, E and F for the recovery of certain documents of title and the goods covered thereby and in the alternative for damages. It is alleged in the plaint that the goods belonged to A, that B obtained from A the documents of title relating thereto by fraud and made them over to C, that C, knowing that B is liable neither to the documents or to the goods, wrongfully dealt with them and sold the goods to D and F, that D and E wrongfully claimed to retain the goods and the documents of title, and lastly that one of the documents of title, namely a railway receipt was pledged by B to F though the goods covered by it were in the possession of D. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. (d). The foundation of the case, which the rest of it depends on, is the alleged fraud of B. If such fraud is proved the question is, did the defendants who all claim under B obtain any title? If the plaintiff fails to prove fraud in the part of B, the case fails against all the defendants. If he proves fraud it may be that the defendants may have a different answer by way of defence, but that does not make the case any the less one of a common question of law and fact. The same act or transaction on which concerns all the parties is the alleged fraud of B, and this involves a common question of law or fact. All defendants have derived title from a person who is alleged to have obtained the goods by means of fraud. By reason of this the possession of all is alleged to be wrongful. It should, however, be convenient the Court may (if Madan v. Lalit (e)) direct the successive trial of the issues separately affecting different defendants. The question of the alleged fraud of B touches all the defendants and may be tried first. If it fails there is an end of the case. (f)

No misjoinder where some reliefs merely ancillary—Where the relief claimed against some of the defendants is merely ancillary to the relief claimed against others, the suit is not bad for misjoinder, provided the suit is not in respect of distinct causes of action. A and B are co-sharers of certain lands in the occupation of C and D. A is entitled to two thirds of the lands and B to one third. A sues B, C and D, asking as against C and D that they may be ejected from his share of the lands, and as against B that the lands may, if necessary, be partitioned between him and B. The suit is not bad for misjoinder, for though the relief claimed as against C and D is for possession, and that claimed as against B is for partition, the latter relief is auxiliary to the principal relief which is for possession. The inclusion of B in this suit is merely as that of a person properly a party to the proceeding in the circumstances of the case, and not as a litigant against whom a separate claim having no necessary connection with the ejectment of C and D is made. B, in fact, is a necessary party to the suit, for an actual division between A and B is essential to the ejectment of C and D (9). See r. 5 below.

Ship—A ship is a "person" within the meaning of this rule, so that a suit may be instituted against a ship as a defendant (5).

"Any right to relief"—The words "any right to relief" are wider than the words "the right to any relief" which occurred in the old section (1).

'Jointly'—(1) B and C simultaneously assault A in pursuance of a conspiracy. A may sue B and C in one suit for damages: see Parajit v Ramdit (1902) 20 Bom. 200, 201. Cf. O Acefe v Walsh [1903] 2 I.R. 691.

(2) A obtains a lease of certain lands from B (landlord), and enters into possession of the lands. B then lets the land in separate portions to C, D and E. Subsequently B, C, D and E forcibly dispossess A of the land. A may sue B, C, D and E in one suit for ejectment. The plaintiff being entitled to claim possession of the land as a whole, the mere fact that C, D and E hold specific and distinct portions of the land under different licences from B, does not make the suit bad for misjoinder of defendants. Aundo v Binomali (1902) 20 Cal. 871, Raghunath v Sarosh (1899) 27 Bom. 206.

(3) Halters v Green [1899] 2 Ch. 696 given as ill. (4) in the notes to O. 1, r. 1, under the head "New Rule," p. 370 above, is also an illustration under this head.

Joint wrong doers—Joint tortfeasors may be sued jointly or severally. Thus where more persons than one are concerned in the commission of a wrong, the person wronged has his remedies against all or any one or more of them at his option. But if the person wronged elects to sue only one of several joint tortfeasors, he cannot afterwards bring a suit against the rest even though the judgment may remain unsatisfied (7).

"Severally."—(1) Certain property held by A is sold under the Madras Rent Recovery Act in separate lots for arrears of rent, and purchased by B, C and D respectively. A sues B, C and D to set aside the sale on the ground that proper notice of sale was not given. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants, merely because the property was sold to different purchasers. "The proceeding under which the various items of the property were sold was one and the ground upon which the validity of the sale was impugned is the same in each case' (k). To use the words of the present rule, the right to relief claimed is in respect of the same act or series of acts and there is a common question of fact and law.

(2) A suit is brought by a reversionary heir, on the death of a Hindu widow, to recover from A, B and C three separate properties sold by the widow to A, B and C respectively by three separate deeds of sale, on the ground that the sales were made without legal necessity. According to the Madras decisions the suit is not bad for misjoinder (l) according to the Bombay and Allahabad decisions, it is (m). These were decisions under the old section. The question under the present rule would be whether if separate suits were brought against A, B and C, any common question of law or fact would arise. In a recent case under the old Code similar to the one above their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "Their Lordships think it is at least very doubtful whether upon the strictest construction to be placed upon the Procedure Code, it can properly be said that there was any misjoinder in this case" (n). In a case under the new Code where the suit was brought by a reversioner claiming a third share of the estate against another reversioner who was in possession of some of the property, and against three other persons two of whom were purchasers and one a mortgagee from the widow it was held by the Allahabad High Court that under the new Code in any event it was not a case of misjoinder of defendants (o).

(3) In a suit for partition of joint family property by a minor against his father, vendees and mortgagees from the father and others who had obtained decrees against the father, it being alleged that the decrees were all collusive and fraudulent, were held by the Madras High Court to be proper parties (p).

"In the alternative"—(1) A executes a lease of his land to B for a period of two years. At the end of the first year A sells the land to C. C demands rent for the second year from B. B alleges payment of the whole rent for two years to A in advance. C may sue A and B, praying for a decree against A, if it be found that B paid the rent to A as alleged, or, in the alternative, against B if it be found that B did not pay the rent to A. Madan Mohun v. Holloway (1886) 12 Cal 555, Mowji v. Awterji (1907) 31 Bom 516.

(2) A purchases certain land from B, and enters into possession. Subsequently he is dispossessed by C who claims to be the owner of the land. A may sue B and C praying for a decree against B for a refund of the purchase money if it is found that C is the owner, or a decree, in the alternative, against C for possession if it is found that C is not the owner. Serajul Huq v. Abdul Rahaman (1902) 29 Cal 257.

(3) A, alleging that his agent B lent Rs. 1,000 to C, and that C had denied receipt of the money from B, sues B and C, praying for a decree against B, if it is found that the amount was not paid to C, or, in the alternative, against C if it is found that the amount was paid to him. The suit is properly framed, for the transaction in respect of which the relief is claimed is the same. Meyappa v. Perannan (1906) 29 Mad 50, Arnnabhella v. Venkataswami (1884) 7 Mad 123.

(4) A mortgages his property to B. B assigns the mortgage to C who gives notice of the assignment to A, and demands payment from A of the amount secured by the mortgage. A says he paid Rs. 200, part of the mortgage debt, to B, before the

The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants, for the right to the relief claimed is in respect of the same transaction. Aiyathurai v Muhamad Meera (1908) 31 Mad 252, Kovvuri v Tallapragadha (1910) 35 Mad 39, 8 I C 1087. Costs where relief is claimed against defendants in the alternative—Where a suit is brought by A against B and C in the alternative, and a decree is passed against B with costs, but the suit as against C is dismissed, the Court has jurisdiction in a proper case to order B (the unsuccessful defendant) to pay in addition to the costs payable by him to A (the plaintiff) the costs of C (the successful defendant). The rule has thus been stated by Vaughan Williams, L J. "The proper way is—do not join any defendant unreasonably, if the facts are such that it is reasonable to join them both and reasonable to be in a state of uncertainty as to which of the two is the really guilty one, then it is part of the reasonable costs of the action that the costs of the action which you have launched against one of those defendants, and who has succeeded in defending himself, should be borne by the man who is to blame" (g). In Child v Stenning (r), Jessel, M R, dealing with a similar question said "It appears to me on principle that he who was the person who caused the litigation, or whose error or representation caused it, ought to be the person to pay the costs of it."

A, representing that he is B's agent, enters into a contract with C on B's behalf. C demands performance of the contract from B. B denies that he employed A as his agent and refuses to perform the contract. C sues A and B for damages and claims relief against them in the alternative. The Court finds that A untruly represented himself to be B's agent. A decree is passed against A for damages, but the suit against B is dismissed with costs. If the Court is of opinion that C reasonably (s) took proceedings against B, the Court may direct the costs payable by C to B to be included in the damages payable by A to C (t).

Appeal—An appeal lies under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order refusing to allow the plaintiff to proceed in one suit against several defendants on the ground of misjoinder and requiring the plaintiff to elect against which of the defendants he would proceed. Such an order is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl 15, for it is in substance a decision that the suit does not lie as framed, with the result that if the plaintiff insists on his alleged rights, the suit must be dismissed (u).

Court may give judgment for or against one or more of joint parties

5. [New R S C, O 16, r 5] It shall not be necessary that every defendant shall be interested as to all the relief claimed in any suit against him

Defendant need not be interested in all the relief claimed

This rule is to be read with r 3 above. It provides in effect that where a suit is brought against several defendants the mere fact that every defendant is not interested in all the relief claimed in the suit is no ground for objection that the suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants. See notes to r 3 above

6 [S 29. R S C, O 16, r 6] The plaintiff may, at his option, join as parties to the same suit all or any of the persons severally, or jointly and severally, liable on any one contract, including parties to bills of exchange, hundis and promissory notes

Joinder of parties liable on same contract

Several liability on a contract—This rule is confined to suits on contracts. The liability on a contract may be either (1) several or (2) joint and several or (3) joint. A and B each for himself, agrees to pay Rs 5 000 to C. Here A and B are severally liable on the contract. C may therefore bring one suit against A and B or he may bring a separate suit against A and a separate suit against B. These suits may be brought simultaneously or they may be brought successively one after the other. But if the suit is brought against A and a decree is obtained against him and the decree is satisfied C cannot subsequently sue B on the contract. But if the decree remains unsatisfied he (C) is not precluded from suing B.

Joint and several liability on a contract—The legal consequences of a joint and several liability on a contract are the same as those of several liability. Thus if A and B pass a bond to C for Rs 5 000 and the bond provides that A and B shall jointly and severally pay the amount to C C may sue A and B jointly, or he may sue them separately, as in the case where the liability is several.

Joint liability on a contract—The present rule does not provide for the case of a joint liability arising on a contract or negotiable instrument. The reason is that so far as liability on a contract is concerned, s 43 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, makes all joint contracts joint and several. It allows a promisee to sue one or more of several joint promisors as he chooses and excludes the right of a joint promisor to be sued along with his co-promisors (c). A partnership firm consisting of two persons A and B, purchases from C goods worth Rs 5 000. The liability of partners is joint,

Several liability on a contract—This rule is confined to suits on contracts. The liability on a contract may be either (1) several, or (2) joint and several or (3) joint. A and B each for himself agrees to pay Rs 5 000 to C. Here A and B are severally liable on the contract. C may therefore bring one suit against A and B, or he may bring a separate suit against A and a separate suit against B. These suits may be brought simultaneously or they may be brought successively one after the other. But if the suit is brought against A and a decree is obtained against him, and the decree is satisfied C cannot subsequently sue B on the contract. But if the decree remains unsatisfied he (C) is not precluded from suing B.

Joint and several liability on a contract—The legal consequences of a joint and several liability on a contract are the same as those of several liability. Thus if A and B pass a bond to C for Rs 5 000 and the bond provides that A and B shall jointly and severally pay the amount to C, C may sue A and B jointly, or he may sue them separately, as in the case where the liability is several.

Joint liability on a contract—The present rule does not provide for the case of a joint liability arising on a contract or negotiable instrument. The reason is that so far as liability on a contract is concerned, s 43 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, makes all joint contracts joint and several. It allows a promisee to sue one or more of several joint promisors as he chooses and excludes the right of a joint promisor to be sued along with his co-promisors (c). and A and B are therefore jointly liable to pay the price to C. But under s 43 of the Contract Act C may sue either A or B at his option. It is not incumbent upon C to join both A and B defendants. If C sues A alone and a decree is passed against A he cannot according to English law afterwards sue B though the decree against A may remain unsatisfied. The reason is that there is in the case of a joint contract a single cause of action which can only be once sued on. The same view has been taken by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay. On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the effect of s 43 of the Indian Contract Act 1872 is to make all joint contracts joint and several. Therefore where C obtained a judgment against A upon a joint bond executed by A and B and the judgment remaining unsatisfied he sued B for the same money it was held by the Allahabad Court that the suit against B was not barred. See Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act notes to s 43. Effect of decree against some only of joint promisors."

It may be added here that if in the case put above C sues A alone A may apply under O 1 r 10 (2) to have B joined as a defendant and the Court may make such order as it thinks proper. In England it has been held that in an action on a joint contract against one only of the joint contractors the Court has jurisdiction without obtaining the consent of the plaintiff to make an order requiring the plaintiff to add the other joint contractor as a co-defendant and that where the defendant has set up a reasonable case of joint contract he has in the absence of special circumstances showing that it should not be made a prima facie right to an order requiring the plaintiff to add that person as a co-defendant (w).

"Parties to bills of exchange"—A draws a bill of exchange upon B payable to C or order. The bill is accepted by B. C then endorses the bill to D. D endorses it to E and E to F. If the bill, while in the hands of F is dishonoured F may at his option sue A (the drawer) or B (the acceptor) or C (the endorser) or D (the endorser) or E (the endorser) or F may bring one action against all or any of them (x).

7. [New R S C, O 16, r 7] Where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to obtain redress, he may join two or more defendants in order that the question as to which of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined as between all parties.

When plaintiff in doubt from whom redress is to be sought

Scope of the rule—This rule applies only where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to obtain redress. It does not apply to a plaintiff to join separate causes of action against different defendants in one action in a case where he could not do so under r 3 above (y). Thus if damage is caused to A's house and he is in doubt as to whether it was caused by excavation works carried on by a County Council or by a Water Company allowing water from its mains to weaken the soil in front of the house A cannot join the Council and the Company in one action for these are two distinct torts. It does not matter that the resulting damage is the same in each case for it is not the damage that constitutes the cause of action but the injury or the wrong done by a tortfeasor (z). In such a case the present rule does not apply. The following however, is a case to which the rule has been held to apply. M, purporting to act as agent for C, enters into a charter party with B for loading B's vessel with a cargo. The cargo is not loaded, and B sues M for damages, alleging that M had no authority to enter into the charter party as agent for C. Subsequently B finds, upon discovery of documents, that it is probable that C did give authority to M to bind him [C] with the charter party, and applies to add C as a defendant. The case is one within this rule and C may be added as a defendant (a).

8 [S 30, S. 32, fourth para. Of R. S. C., O. 16, r. 9.]

One per on may sue or defend on behalf of all in same interest

(1) Where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons may, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued, or may defend, in such suit, on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested. But the Court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of the suit to all such persons either by personal service or, where from the number of persons or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable, by public advertisement, as the Court in each case may direct.

(2) Any person on whose behalf or for whose benefit a suit is instituted or defended under sub-rule (1) may apply to the Court to be made a party to such suit.

Object of the rule — This rule is an exception to the general rule that all persons interested in a suit ought to be made parties thereto (b). Convenience requires that in suits where there is a community of interest amongst a large number of persons a few should be allowed to represent the whole (c) so that trouble and expense may be saved (d).

Application of the rule — The provisions of this rule apply only if (1) the parties are numerous (2) they have the same interest and (3) the necessary permission is obtained and notice given.

Representative suit — A suit filed by one or more persons under this rule on behalf of themselves and others having the same interest in the suit is called a representative suit. The provisions of Explanation VI to s 11 [res judicata] apply to such a suit.

"Numerous parties" — Fluctuating body — Where the number of defendants was thirty it was held to be numerous (e). It has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit cannot be brought under this rule on behalf of the general public (f). Following this decision the High Court of Calcutta held in an earlier case that this rule did not apply unless the parties were capable of being ascertained and a suit could not therefore be

1, r. 8. brought under this rule on behalf of the Hindu community as "the whole Hindu community is incapable of ascertainment" (g) This decision was dissented from by the same High Court in subsequent cases, where it was held that it was not necessary to the application of this rule that the parties should be capable of being ascertained (h) In this connection it may be observed that property may be owned by a fluctuating body of persons like the inhabitants of a village (i), or the Dhobi community of Naranda (j), and a suit may be brought on their behalf under this rule. It has also been held that a person may render himself liable to a community like the Vjsa community of Mogarala by agreeing to pay a certain sum of money to it, and a suit to recover it may be brought by the community under this rule (l)

"Same Interest"—It is essential that the parties should have the same interest in the suit. Thus where there are numerous legatees under a will any one legatee may sue the executors on behalf of himself and the other legatees for a discovery of the estate of the deceased come into their hands, as they have all the same interest in having the will proved (f). Similarly, where a person dies leaving numerous creditors any one creditor may sue on behalf of himself and the other creditors, as they all have the same interest in making out the estate of the deceased as large as possible (m). On the same principle of the community of interest, any one rayat of a village may sue the proprietor of the village for himself and the other rayats for a declaration as against the proprietor of their general rights (n). Similarly a villager may bring a suit on behalf of himself and his fellow villagers for a declaration of a right of way and for an injunction against the defendant for obstructing the way (o). Likewise, any one tax payer may bring a suit against a Municipality on behalf of himself and the other tax payers to restrain the Municipality from misapplying its funds (p).

In Templeton v Russell (9) a case under the corresponding English rule, it was held that the rule only applies to persons who have or claim some beneficial proprietary right which they are asserting or defending in the suit. But this meaning of the word "interest" was disapproved by the House of Lords in Budford (Duke of) v Ellis (11). In the last mentioned case Lord Macnaghten said: "It seems to me that there is no reason whatever for so restricting the rule. Given a common interest and a common grievance a representative suit was in order if the relief sought was in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposed to represent." To limit the rule to persons having a beneficial proprietary interest would be opposed to precedent and not, I think, in accordance with common sense. Take the case of a creditor's suit which perhaps was the earliest instance of plaintiffs being allowed to sue in a representative character. It can hardly be suggested that a creditor has a proprietary interest in the real or personal estate of his deceased debtor. Thus the disciples of a mutt have sufficient 'interest' within the meaning of this rule to maintain a representative suit to declare alienations made by the Mahant invalid and have the property alienated handed over to the Mahant for the time being (12). Similarly worshippers of a temple have sufficient 'interest' to maintain a representative suit for a declaration that a permanent lease of temple property granted to the defendants in possession is invalid (4), or for recovering temple property from a trespasser (u)

The expression "same interest" must be distinguished from the expression "same transaction" What is required under this rule is that the parties should have the same interest, it is not sufficient that their interests arise from the same transaction Therefore, where goods of several persons are shipped under separate bills of lading, the mere fact that the goods of all the persons are lost by the same cause does not entitle any one or more of them to bring a representative suit on behalf of themselves and others against the owner of the ship (v) But they may all join in one suit under O 1, r 1

When a caste is divided into two parties, one party being in favour of instituting a suit [e.g., a suit for accounts against the treasurer] and the other consisting of a fairly good number being against it, it is not permissible to any member of the party favouring the suit to institute a suit under this rule on behalf of himself and all other members of the caste The reason is that it cannot be said in such a case that all the members have the same interest (w)

Different interests—Where the parties have not the same interest, they must all be on the record Thus in a partition suit all co parceners must be brought before the Court (x) Similarly in a suit for contribution brought by a promisor, all the co promisors bound to contribute must be brought before the Court (y)

Clubs and other associations—The secretary of a club or other association cannot sue alone in respect of a matter in which the association is interested even if he is authorised so to do by a resolution of the members of the association The suit must be brought by all the members of the association or by the secretary on his own behalf and on behalf of the other members under this rule (z) So, if the treasurer of an association misappropriates the funds of the association, no one member can sue alone to recover the amount misappropriated though he may be authorised so to do by a resolution of the association The suit must be brought by all the members, or by any one member on his own behalf and on behalf of the other members (a) The secretary of a club cannot, unless he has expressly accepted a personal liability, be sued personally on a contract, entered into by him on behalf of the club, nor can the members of a club collectively be sued through the secretary (b) The same remarks apply to an unregistered company (c) A suit to eject tenants from property belonging to the caste cannot be brought by the president of the managing committee of the caste though he may be authorized to do so by a resolution of the committee The suit must be brought by him on behalf of all the members of the caste (d) But no suit can be brought under this rule at all if the caste or association is divided into two parties one party being for the suit and the other against it In such a case it cannot be said that on behalf of all the members of a caste, the members of the caste have the same interest in the suit "within the meaning of this rule (e) See notes above Numerous parties

D. 1, r. 8. Fraudulent transfer—A suit to set aside a deed of gift or of trust on the ground that it is in fraud of creditors must be brought by or on behalf of all the creditors. Such a suit cannot be entertained if it is brought by only some of the creditors (f)

Suit by a member of a community in his own right—This rule is an enabling rule. It does not debar a member of a community from maintaining a suit in his own right, though the act complained of is injurious to the whole community. Thus if Mahomedans belonging to a particular sect are not allowed to use a mosque for prayer, any member of the sect entitled to use the mosque may sue as plaintiff to enforce the right. It is not necessary that the suit should be brought by him on behalf of himself and all other members of the sect entitled to use the mosque. A Mahomedan entitled to worship in a mosque may sue for a declaration that certain property alienated by the mutawali is wakf property, and for possession thereof from the alienee (g). Similarly, any member of a community may bring a suit to set aside unauthorized alienations of endowed property or of property belonging to the community, or for the removal of encroachments upon such property (h), or for maladministration of property belonging to the community (i).

At what stage of the suit leave should be obtained—The proper course is to obtain permission before the suit is instituted, but there is nothing in the rule that if it is not so done, it cannot be granted afterwards. Permission under this rule may be granted even after the institution of the suit (j).

Whether the leave should be express—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the leave to sue need not be express, it is enough if it can be gathered from the proceedings (k). On the other hand, there is a dictum of Stuart, C.J., in the Allahabad case of Hivalal v Bhairon (l), that the leave to sue must be express.

Leave must be granted to definitely named persons—Where this was not done, the suit was dismissed by the High Court of Calcutta (m). The other Courts would probably grant fresh leave in such a case. See notes above, "At what stage, of the suit, etc."

"May be sued."—This rule applies not only to the case of numerous plaintiffs having the same interest, but also to the case of numerous defendants having the same interest. Thus where the inhabitants of a village assert a right of way over land belonging to the plaintiff, the plaintiff may, with the permission of the Court, sue any one or more of the inhabitants on behalf of them all (n). The consent of the defendants on the record is not necessary for this purpose (o).

"May defend."—When there are numerous defendants having the same interest, any one of them "may be sued" on his behalf and on behalf of others. But where this is not done, and all the defendants are on the record, any one defendant "may defend" the suit on behalf of himself and the rest with the permission of the Court.

Who should apply for permission—(1) Where a plaintiff intends to sue on behalf of himself and others, it is the plaintiff that should apply for leave. (2) Similarly where a plaintiff intends to sue one defendant for himself and others, it is the plaintiff that should apply for leave. (3) Where numerous defendants having the same interest are all sued, and they are all on the record, and if any one defendant is appointed by the other defendants to defend the suit on behalf of all, it is that defendant that has to apply for leave.

Notice and the object of it—Where a person sues, or is sued, or defends, a suit, on behalf of himself and others, any decree that may be passed in the suit is binding upon them all (s 11, Explanation VI), unless the decree has been obtained by fraud or collusion (Evidence Act, 1872, s 44). It is therefore necessary that notice of the suit should be given to all the parties who would be bound by the decree, for otherwise a person might be concluded by a suit of which he may never have heard. It is, however, open to any one of the parties, whose name does not stand on the record and who would be bound by the decree under the provisions of this rule and sec 11, to apply to the Court under sub rule (2) to be made a party to the suit, and the Court will add him as a party, provided he satisfies the Court that his interest will be seriously prejudiced if he is not joined as a party (p).

Court shall give notice by personal service or by public advertisement—These words show that it is the duty of the Court to cause service of the notice or cause an advertisement to be published. It is the duty of the plaintiff, however, to move the Court for that purpose. But if he omits to do so, the suit ought not to be dismissed on account of the failure of the Court to perform the duties imposed upon it by this rule. The appellate Court should in such a case remand the case to the Court of first instance so that it may issue the notice (q).

Title of suit—The title of the suit in such cases is as follows [see Appendix A, Pleadings, (1) Titles of suits]—

A, B on behalf of himself and all other creditors (if X)	Plaintiff
C D	Defendant

Suit in name of wrong plaintiff—I brings a suit under this section on behalf of himself and other creditors of X. It turns out that A is not a creditor of X. Thereupon B, an admitted creditor of X applies to be added as a plaintiff under (1) 10 (1). Has the Court power to grant the application? The question arose in a recent Madras case, but it was left open (r). It is submitted that if the suit was instituted by I through a bona fide mistake, which it was not in the Madras case, the amendment may be allowed on terms.

Addition of plaintiffs after decree—Where the plaintiffs on record neglect to execute the decree passed in a suit brought under this rule, the Court may add other persons having the same interest as the plaintiffs to enable them to execute the decree (s).

Decree in a representative suit—The general rule of law is that in suits where one person is allowed to represent others as defendants in a representative capacity, any decree passed can bind those others only with respect to the pr party of those others which he can in law represent, and no personal decree can be passed against them, although the party on record eo nomine may be made personally liable. This is the principle to be applied to suits brought under this rule (t). It has accordingly been held that an injunction in a decree passed in a representative suit brought under this rule is not binding on those who are not actually parties on the record (u). See s 11, Explanation VI.

Costs in a representative suit—As to costs in a representative suit, see the observations of Marten, J., in the undermentioned case (v).

Abatement of suit—Where a suit is brought under this rule by A on behalf of himself and 20 others, and one of the twenty nine who had never applied to the Court to be made a party under sub r (2) dies pending the suit, his death does not cause the suit to abate (w).

Abatement of appeal—A suit is brought by A and B under this rule on behalf of themselves and 387 others against C, and a decree is passed in the suit for the plaintiffs. C appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal 3 out of the 387 who had never applied to be made parties under sub r (2) die. C does not apply to bring on record the legal representatives of the three deceased. Does the appeal abate? No, because the three deceased were not parties to the suit eo nomine (x).

Forty persons institute a suit against B in their own names (and not under this rule) and obtain a decree jointly against B. B appeals from the decree, and applies for and obtains an order from the appellate Court when the appeal is admitted that 4 out of the 40 respondents may be permitted under this rule to defend the appeal. Pending the appeal one of the 36 respondents dies, but no steps are taken to bring his legal representative on the record. Does the appeal abate? Yes, because the decree was obtained by the plaintiffs for themselves and not in a representative capacity. Even if the procedure prescribed by this rule is applicable to appeals by the operation of s 107, the order passed by the appellate Court under this rule did not relieve B from the necessity of impleading all those persons who were plaintiffs in the suit and had obtained a decree in their favour, and the representatives of any of those persons who had died. Further, the decree having been passed in favour of all the forty plaintiffs jointly, the appeal abates in its entirety (y).

9. [S 31, RSC, O 16, r 11.] No suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it.

Misjoinder of parties—A misjoinder or non joinder of parties is not fatal to the suit (z). Where there is a misjoinder of parties, the name of the plaintiff or the defendant who has been improperly joined, may be struck out under s 10, sub s (2) below, and the case may be proceeded with. See s 99 above.

Non-joinder of parties—As regards non joinder of parties a distinction has been drawn between the non joinder of a person who ought to have been joined as a party and the non joinder of a person whose joinder is only a matter of convenience or expediency [see O 1, r 10 (2)] A suit by executors, trustees, co owners of immoveable property, partners, etc, for recovery of property in which they are jointly interested, belongs to the former class. As to this class of cases it has been held that if the suit is brought by some only of the persons interested, e g, by some of the executors and not all, and if the defendant objects on the ground of non joinder the plaintiffs may apply for an amendment to join the absent parties as co plaintiffs, in which case the Court should allow the application and not dismiss the suit. But if, after the objection has been raised, the plaintiffs proceed with the suit without bringing on the record the persons whose non joinder has been objected to the suit, it has been held, must be dismissed the reason given is that O 1, r 9 enacts merely a rule of procedure, and it cannot affect rules of substantive law, and further, that the decree will not be operative, as it must deal with the interest of the absent persons who cannot be bound thereby. In the latter class of cases, that is, cases in which the joinder of a person as a party is only a matter of convenience the absent party may be added or the suit may be tried without him (a) The same principle applies in the case of defendants (b) See notes to O 1, r 10 'Limitation Act see 22'

SUB RULE (1)

Sub rule (1) is the equivalent of s. 27 of the Code of 1882. It corresponds to R. S. C. O. 16 r. 2

Scope of sub-rule (1)—Sub rule (1) contemplates cases in which a suit is brought by a plaintiff, and he subsequently finds out that he cannot get the full relief he seeks without joining some other person as co plaintiff (c) or where it is found that some other person, and not the original plaintiff, is entitled to the relief claimed. In the former case the application (which must be made by the original plaintiff) will be for a joining, and in the latter for substituting that other person as plaintiff. But the Court must be satisfied before the application is granted that the amendment has become necessary through a bona fide mistake on the part of the original plaintiff. The mistake may be either one of fact (d) or of law (e). Where the point is doubtful it is in itself evidence of a bona fide mistake (f). Again where the Court of first instance takes one view of the law and the Court of Appeal takes another that in itself is evidence of a bona fide mistake (g).

Amendment allowed—(1) The Official Assignee of Madras constitutes A B, Official Assignee of Bombay, his attorney to institute a suit on his behalf in Bombay. A B instead of suing as 'constituted attorney of the Official Assignee of Madras' sues by mistake as "Official Assignee of Bombay". The plaint may be amended under sub rule (1) by substituting the former description for the latter. Sardarmal v. Aran Inral (1897) 21 Bom. 203.

(2) A Hindu appoints A guardian of the property of his minor son under his will. There is no executor appointed under the will. A, believing that his appointment as guardian has the effect of constituting him executor of the will by implication, sues B to recover certain property belonging to the estate of the deceased. The Court finds that A is not executor by implication. The plaint may be amended by substituting the son as plaintiff. Seshamma v. Chennappa (1897) 20 Mad. 467. (3) A sues B for work done under a contract. B contends that the contract has been assigned by A to C, and A therefore has no right to sue. A admits the assignment, but says that the assignment is not absolute but by way of charge only, and that he has therefore a right to sue. It is found that the assignment to C is absolute and that there was a bona fide mistake on the part of A in believing that the assignment was by way of charge only. The plaint may be amended by substituting C as plaintiff. Hughes v Pump House Hotel Co [1902] 2 K. B. 485

In the last mentioned case, B objected to the amendment on the ground that it having been found that the assignment was an absolute one, A had no cause of action at the time the action was brought, but the objection was overruled. Cozens Hardy, L.J., said "It is said that the rule does not apply when it is shown that the plaintiff has no right of action, but there are abundant authorities to the contrary effect. The cases cited in the judgment in that case clearly show that the plaint would have been allowed to be amended, if that was the application, by adding C as plaintiff. This interpretation of O. 16, r. 2, of the English Rules, which corresponds in wording with sub rule (1) of this rule, would seem to be opposed to the view taken by the High Court of Bombay. It would seem that the Bombay Court would not allow an amendment if the original plaintiff had no right of action at the time the suit was brought (A). But this view, it is submitted, is not correct, and one of the cases cited by that Court in support of its view affirms the contrary (1). In a recent case, the High Court of Madras expressly held that the fact that the original plaintiff has no cause of action does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court to order the substitution of another person as plaintiff (2).

Amendment not allowed—It would seem that no amendment should be allowed under sub rule (1), if the rights in dispute between the new plaintiff and the defendant would not be the same as those in dispute between the original plaintiff and the defendant. A suit is brought by an importer of 'Roskopf Patent' watches for infringement of trade mark, alleging that he has got the exclusive right to use the trade mark in India. The trade mark belongs to the manufacturer, and not to the importer. The importer is subsequently advised that he cannot sue on the manufacturer's trade mark and he thereupon applies that the manufacturer may be either added or substituted as plaintiff. If the manufacturer is made a party, his claim will raise questions as to how far he is entitled to the trade mark in the country of its origin, and consequently in India. That would be a case wholly different from that of the importer. Can the manufacturer be made a party under these circumstances? The question arose in a Bombay case (L). Batty, J. said that the point was one on which there seemed to be considerable room for doubt. Eventually the application was refused on the ground that it was made too late.

Upon such terms as the Court thinks fit—Liberty to amend may be given upon the terms that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant his costs of the suit upto and including the order of amendment and that the new plaintiff should only be entitled to such relief as he could have claimed if the suit had been commenced at the date on which he was added as a party (1).

(4) Where a defendant is added, the plaint shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, be amended in such manner as may be necessary, and amended copies of the summons and of the plaint shall be served on the new defendant and if the Court thinks fit, on the original defendant

Sub rule (1) is the equivalent of s. 27 of the Code of 1882. It corresponds to P. S. C. O. 16 r. 2.

Scope of sub-rule (1)—Sub rule (1) contemplates cases in which a suit is brought by a plaintiff and he subsequently finds out that he cannot get the full relief he seeks without joining some other person as co plaintiff (c) or where it is found that some other person and not the original plaintiff is entitled to the relief claimed. In the former case the application (which must be made by the original plaintiff) will be for adding and in the latter for substituting that other person as plaintiff. But the Court must be satisfied before the application is granted that the amendment has become necessary through a bona fide mistake on the part of the original plaintiff. The mistake may be either one of fact (d) or of law (e). Where the point is doubtful it is in itself evidence of a bona fide mistake (f). Again where the Court of first instance takes one view of the law and the Court of Appeal takes another that in itself is evidence of a bona fide mistake (g).

Amendment allowed—(1) The Official Assignee of Madras constitutes A. P. Official Assignee of Bombay his attorney to institute a suit on his behalf in Bombay. B instead of suing as constituted attorney of the Official Assignee of Madras sues by mistake as Official Assignee of Bombay. The plaint may be amended under sub rule (1) by substituting the former description for the latter. Sardarjal v. Irarjalal (1897) 21 Bom. 20.

(2) A Hindu appoints A guardian of the property of his minor son under his will. There is no executor appointed under the will. A believing that his appointment as guardian has the effect of constituting him executor of the will by implication sues B to recover certain property belonging to the estate of the deceased. The Court finds that A is not executor by implication. The plaint may be amended by substituting the son as plaintiff. Seshamma v. Chennappa (1897) 20 Ma L. 467. [In this case the amendment was allowed in second appeal.]

(3) A sues B for work done under a contract. B contends that the contract has been assigned by A to C, and A therefore has no right to sue. A admits the assignment, but says that the assignment is not absolute but by way of charge only, and that he has therefore a right to sue. It is found that the assignment to C is absolute and that there was a bona fide mistake on the part of A in believing that the assignment was by way of charge only. The plaint may be amended by substituting C as plaintiff. Hughes v Pump House Hotel Co [1902] 2 K B 485. O. 1.

In the last mentioned case, B objected to the amendment on the ground that, it having been found that the assignment was an absolute one, A had no cause of action at the time the action was brought, but the objection was overruled. Cozens Hardy, L.J., said 'It is said that the rule does not apply when it is shown that the plaintiff has no right of action, but there are abundant authorities to the contrary effect.' The cases cited in the judgment in that case clearly show that the plaint would have been allowed to be amended, if that was the application, by adding C as plaintiff. This interpretation of O 16, r 2, of the English Rules, which corresponds in wording with sub rule (1) of this rule, would seem to be opposed to the view taken by the High Court of Bombay. It would seem that the Bombay Court would not allow an amendment if the original plaintiff had no right of action at the time the suit was brought (h). But this view, it is submitted, is not correct, and one of the cases cited by that Court in support of its view affirms the contrary (i). In a recent case, the High Court of Madras expressly held that the fact that the original plaintiff has no cause of action does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court to order the substitution of another person as plaintiff (j).

Amendment not allowed—It would seem that no amendment should be allowed under sub rule (1) if the rights in dispute between the new plaintiff and the defendant would not be the same as those in dispute between the original plaintiff and the defendant. A suit is brought by an importer of Roskopf Patent watches for infringement of trade mark, alleging that he has got the exclusive right to use the trade mark in India. The trade mark belongs to the manufacturer, and not to the importer. The importer is subsequently advised that he cannot sue on the manufacturer's trade mark and he thereupon applies that the manufacturer may be either added or substituted as plaintiff. If the manufacturer is made a party, his claim will raise questions as to how far he is entitled to the trade mark in the country of its origin, and consequently in India. That would be a case wholly different from that of the importer. Can the manufacturer be made a party under these circumstances? The question arose in a Bombay case (L). Batty J. said that the point was one on which there seemed to be considerable room for doubt. Eventually the application was refused on the ground that it was made too late.

Upon such terms as the Court thinks fit—Liberty to amend may be given upon the terms that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant his costs of the suit upto and including the order of amendment and that the new plaintiff should only be entitled to such relief as he could have claimed if the suit had been commenced at the date on which he was added as a party (l).

1, r. 10. Consent—No person can be added or substituted as plaintiff under sub rule (1) without his consent. Thus a company cannot be made a plaintiff in a suit without its consent (m). See sub rule (3).

Limitation—Section 22 of the Limitation Act provides that when after the institution of a suit, a party is substituted or added as a plaintiff or defendant, the date of substitution or addition is to be deemed, as regards that party, as the date of institution. It has been held that this provision of the law relates only to the addition of parties under sub rule (2), and not under sub rule (1). The result is that a party may be substituted or added under sub rule (1) even after the period of limitation. Thus where an agent sued in his own name, and subsequently, at a time when a new suit would have been barred by limitation, his principals were substituted as plaintiffs, it was held that the suit being the same, the change of parties did not affect the question of limitation (n).

SUB RULES (2) to (5)

Sub rules (2), (3) and (5) correspond to s. 32 of the Code of 1882 and to R. S. C. O. 16, r. 11. Sub rule (4) corresponds to s. 33 of the Code of 1882.

Old section—Under the old section 32 there was a distinction between the power of the Court to strike out parties and the power to add parties. Under that section the power to strike out parties could only be exercised on the application of a party, and that too if the application was made on or before the first hearing. But the power to add parties could be exercised by the Court at any time, and even without any application. Under sub rule (2), the power to strike out as well as to add parties may be exercised by the Court at any stage of the proceedings, and even without any application by a party.

"At any stage of the proceedings"—The power to strike out or add parties may be exercised at any stage of the proceedings. Thus fresh parties were added in one case after a decree had been passed and a reference made to the Commissioner to take accounts and sell the property (o). In another case fresh parties were added after a suit had been reinstated under s. 108 of the Code of 1882 [now O. 9, r. 13] (p). In a Calcutta case a fresh party was added in a suit for partition after the preliminary decree had been passed and the Commissioner had made his report, but before the drawing up of the final decree (q). Under the corresponding English rule it has been held that the Court has jurisdiction to allow amendment even after final judgment so long as anything remains to be done in the action, though it be only assessment of damages (r).

Parties when added—Under this rule a person may be added as a party to a suit in the following two cases—

(1) when he ought to have been joined as plaintiff or defendant, and is not so joined, or

(2) when, without his presence, the questions in the suit cannot be completely decided.

O. 1, r. 10. C's application to make him a plaintiff in the suit in place of A, though it may be found that C, and not A, is entitled to the money. To do so would be to deprive A of his right to ask for a determination upon his claim (b).

Transposing plaintiff as defendant—In the case of a difference between co-plaintiffs, the proper course is to make an order that the name of one of them be struck out as plaintiff and added as a defendant (c). But such an order will be made only on security being given by the plaintiff who continues on the record as plaintiff for the costs of the original defendant up to the date of the amendment (d). Such an order may be supported by the terms of sub r (2), namely, "on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just."

Striking out name of party "improperly joined"—The impropriety referred to in this rule is in introducing a party who has no connection with the relief claimed in the plaint (e).

"Who ought to have been joined"—Sub r (2) provides for the addition of (1) necessary parties and (2) of proper parties. Necessary parties are parties "who ought to have been joined," that is, parties necessary to the constitution of the suit without whom no decree at all can be passed (f). Proper parties are those whose presence enables the Court to adjudicate more "effectually and completely" (g) see next paragraph.

Thus all co-sharers are necessary parties to a suit for partition and they should all be joined as parties to the suit. Similarly, in a suit to recover trust property, all the trustees must be joined as parties [O 31, r 2]. But the Official Assignee is not a necessary party in a suit against an insolvent (h) [see O 22, r. 10, notes "Assignment of interest," ibis (3) and (4)]. In a suit to set aside an order for rateable distribution all persons interested in the distribution must be parties to the suit (i), see s 73. See notes below, "Limitation Act."

"Whose presence before the Court may be necessary"—A person may be added as a defendant to a suit, though no relief may be claimed against him, provided his presence is necessary for a complete and final decision of the questions involved in the suit (j). Such a person is called a proper party as distinguished from a necessary party. Thus if a suit is brought by a legatee against an executor for a legacy, but the estate is not sufficient to pay all the legacies in full, the executor may apply under sub rule (2) that the other legatees may be made parties, so that if any rateable abatement is requisite, the extent of such abatement may be ascertained in a manner binding on all the legatees (l). See notes above, "Who ought to have been joined."

"Questions involved in the suit"—This refers to questions as between plaintiffs and defendants, and not to questions which may arise between co-plaintiffs or between co-defendants inter se (1).

Improper addition of plaintiff or defendant—Sub rule (2) does not enable a Court to override the effect of O 2, r 3. Hence if the joinder of a person is plaintiff would result in a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, or the joinder of a person as defendant would result in a misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, the application should be refused (m)

Joint contractors—See notes to O 1, ¶ 6, "Joint liability on a contract"

Consent of person added as plaintiffs—If any person who ought to have been joined as plaintiff does not consent to join as plaintiff, he may be made a defendant in the suit. The proper course is first to require him to join as plaintiff, and if he refuses to join as plaintiff, then to join him as defendant. But the suit should not be dismissed merely because he is joined as defendant without being first called upon to join as plaintiff (n)

Suit against a dead person.—Where a suit is brought against a person who was dead prior to the institution of the suit, the plaint cannot be amended by bringing his legal representative on the record, though the suit may have been filed in ignorance of his death. The reason is that a suit against a dead man is a nullity from the first (o)

Limitation Act, sec. 22, provides amongst other things that when, after the institution of a suit, a party is added as a plaintiff or defendant, the date of addition is to be considered as regards that party as the date of the institution of the suit. It has been held under this section that where necessary parties are not joined within the period of limitation, the suit must be dismissed. Necessary parties mean parties necessary to the constitution of the suit (p), that is, persons whose joinder is necessary to enable the Court to award such relief as may be given in the suit as framed (q). Thus in a suit by one of several joint promisees the other promisees are necessary parties for no relief can be given to one of them. The suit is not perfectly constituted unless all the co-promisees join, for the plaintiff can only enforce his claim in conjunction with them. If in such a suit the other promisees are not joined within the period of limitation, the suit must be dismissed (r). Similarly where A, B and C were three partners, and A sued B only for partnership accounts, and C was added as a defendant after the period of limitation, the suit was dismissed (s). On the same ground, where a member of a joint Hindu family sued in his own name for a joint debt without making the other members parties to the suit, and the defendant raised an objection on the ground of non-joinder, and the period of limitation had by that time expired, it was held that it was too late to join the other members as co-plaintiffs, as the claim was at that date time barred, and the suit was accordingly dismissed (t). And the suit must likewise be dismissed, even if the Court of its own motion adds to the other members as plaintiffs in circumstances such as those mentioned above. The mere fact that the Court of its own motion orders that the name of any person be added as a party does not render the provisions of s. 22 inapplicable to the case (u). There is nothing in sub rule (2) which frees the Court, when acting of its own motion from the restrictions of the Limitation Act, in other words, a Court, acting under sub rule (2), is bound by the provisions of s. 22 of the Limitation Act (v). On the other hand, when a suit can be, and is, constituted without

1, r. 10. joining certain persons as parties, and they are subsequently added as parties for the benefit of the defendants to ensure them against further litigation, the suit should proceed though they are added as parties after the expiry of the period of limitation and the Court should award such relief as may be given in the suit as framed to such a case the provisions of s. 22 do not apply (u). Thus where a promissory note is passed to the manager of a joint Hindu family, he may sue the promisor without joining the other members of the family as co-plaintiffs. In such a case if the other members are joined as plaintiffs after the statutory period has expired, their joinder, being unnecessary does not prevent the suit as originally constituted from being in time (x). It has similarly been held that that section does not apply when a person is added as a party merely to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon the questions involved in the suit without any relief being claimed against him (y). Further, the section does not apply where an assignee from a party to a suit, the assignment having been made pending the suit, is joined as a party to the suit (z). It has also been held that that section does not apply where a person is joined as a defendant in a suit and he is subsequently added as a plaintiff (a). In a case before the Privy Council, where relief was claimed against a debtor estate, but none of the defendants was impleaded as representing the estate, and subsequently, though after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the suit, one of the defendants (i.e., a person already a party to the suit) was impleaded as sebast and as representing the estate, it was held that s. 22 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case (b).

Misdescription—Where there is a misdescription of a defendant in the title of a suit, there is complete power in the Court to make the necessary correction with out regard to lapse of time. In this class of cases it is material to ascertain against whom the relief is claimed. A sues the Municipal Committee of Gorakhpur through the Secretary instead of suing the Committee through the President as he should have done. The relief claimed is against the Committee. No personal relief is sought against the Secretary. The case is one of misdescription and the plaint ought to be allowed to be amended though the application for amendment was made after the expiry of the period of limitation (c). A sues "The Agent, B B & C I Ry Co Ltd." The relief claimed is against the railway company. No personal relief is claimed against the Agent. A applies for amendment of the plaint after the expiry of the statutory period by striking out the word "Agent". The amendment should be allowed, the suit being substantially against the company (d). But if the relief claimed was as against the Agent personally, the Court may allow the amendment if there is no question of limitation (e), but no such amendment should be allowed after the expiry of the period of limitation for the suit (f).

Appeal—No appeal lies under this Code from any order made under this rule. But where the name of a defendant is struck out under this rule on the ground that the plaint does not disclose any cause of action against him, the order operates as a decree and is appealable as such (g). Similarly if in a suit for partition the name of one of the defendants is struck out on the ground that he has no interest in the properties, the subject matter of the suit, he may appeal from the order, as the order operates as a decree against him (h).

Revision—An order refusing to add a party as a defendant is not subject to revision under s 115. But the High Court may interfere under s 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, if there is a denial of the right of fair trial (i).

Objections as to non-joinder or misjoinder

Scope of the rule—This rule refers to two kinds of objections the one for non-joinder of parties and the other for misjoinder of parties. These objections must be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, otherwise the objection will be deemed to have been waived (j). Where an objection to non-joinder (k) or misjoinder (l) of parties is not taken in the Court of first instance, it will be disallowed in appeal. See notes to O 1 r 9 above. See also s. 99.

1, r. 13. fact it was so held under the old section though the words "unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen" did not occur in that section. Thus if a co parcener or a reversioner or a remainderman is born after the settlement of issues in a suit to which he is a necessary party, the defendant may object to his non joinder, though it be after the settlement of issues if the plaintiff does not take steps to join him as a party to the suit. Thus in a partition suit all co parceners must be joined as parties, even though some of them may be born after the institution of the suit. Similarly, where a woman who is a party to a suit is married after the settlement of issues and the nature of the suit is such that the husband is a necessary party to it the plaintiff should take steps to have the husband made a party to the suit, otherwise the defendant may object for non joinder of the husband, though it be after the settlement of issues (n)

ORDER II.

Frame of Suit.

0.2, 1, 2. 1. [S 42] Every suit shall as far as practicable be framed so as to afford ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation concerning them

Frame of suit

From this rule read with rule (2) below, the intention of the Legislature appears to be that as far as possible all matters in dispute between the parties relating to the same transaction should be disposed of in the same suit (o)

2. [S. 43] (1) Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court

Suit to include the whole claim

(2) Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished.

Relinquish him nt of part of claim

(3) A person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of such reliefs, but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue

(Omission to sue for one of several reliefs)

(n) Mothé v. Tongue (1881) 5 L.R. 609

(o) Sa al Chand v. Mahun Bhai (1894) 23 Cal 31. See also Jamasurami v. Iyathatha

(1901) 26 Mad 780 781 786 Marikametti v. Thiruvengadam (1903) 31 Mad 320 321 326 for all such reliefs he shall not afterwards sue for any relief C so omitted

Explanation—For the purposes of this rule an obligation and a collateral security for its performance and successive claims arising under the same obligation shall be deemed respectively to constitute but one cause of action.

Illu at on

A lets a house to B at a yearly rent of Rs 1000. The rent for the whole of the years 1906, 1907 and 1908 due and unpaid. A sues B in 1908 only for the rent due for 1906. A shall not afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1907 or 1908.

Changes in the section—The words obtained before the first hearing after the order the leave of the Court [see sub rule (3)] have been omitted. The words and successive claims arising under the same obligation have been added into the Explanation. The Illustration has been expanded as so to comprise the case of rent payable for a period less than 12 months to the one for which the suit is brought.

Cause of action—In I t a p P a j a v S r j a P a u (p) the Lordships of the Privy Council referring to the express cause of action in this rule said that it meant the cause of action for which the suit was brought. Referring to this decision the Lordships said in the recent case of M u l a n a d H a f i v M J a n n a Z a k a r j a (q)

The Lord is prepared to attempt to qualify or to extend those words because they are in fact nothing but a rejection of the exact words of the Code the cause of action is the cause of action which gives occasion for and forms the foundation of the suit and that case enables a plaintiff to sue for larger and deeper relief than that which is limited to the claim. He cannot afterwards seek to recover the balance by independent proceedings. See notes to a 90 Case of action on promissory

(1) Relinquishment—A owes B Rs 2,000 B may relinquish Rs 200 to bring his suit within the jurisdiction of a Presidency Small Cause Court, and may sue A in that Court for Rs 2 000 only Here the relinquishment being intentional, B cannot afterwards sue A for Rs 200, the portion relinquished But if the suit is transferred, on A's application, to the High Court, B may add Rs 200 to his claim, the High Court having jurisdiction over the entire claim Ramlall v Bhajahari (1896) 1 C W N 32

(2) Accidental omission—A Mahomedan wife sues her husband to recover property belonging to her including Government paper of the value of Rs 10,000 and a decree is passed in her favour She afterwards sues the husband to recover from him Government paper of the value of Rs 500, alleging that she omitted to include it in the previous suit by an oversight The suit is barred, for she was aware of her claim when she brought the previous suit Bu loor Ruheem v Shumsunnissa (1887) 11 M I A 551

(3) Instalments—Where a promissory note is payable by instalments, and two or more instalments have become due, and the holder of the note sues only for one of the instalments and omits to sue for the other instalments, he cannot afterwards sue for those instalments Mackintosh v Gill (1874) 12 B L R 37, Narayan v Limba (1906) 8 Bom L R 547 Similarly if a promissory note is made payable by instalments and it is provided that upon a default in the payment of any one instalment on the agreed date the promisee shall be entitled to payment of the balance due at once, and the promisee, upon a default occurring sues to recover the amount of the first instalment only, he is precluded from suing afterwards for the balance Srinivas v Channasappa,owda (1923) 25 Bom L R 203, 72 I C, 290 (23) A B 201

(4) Two promises for one debt—A accompanies B, a pleader, to Haridwar, as B's medical attendant, for which Rs 1,300 become due to him as his fees B passes a promissory note to A for Rs 700 and agrees as for the balance of Rs 600 to do certain legal work for A B dies without doing the legal work undertaken by him A sues C, B's son, upon the promissory note, and a decree is passed for him He then brings another suit against C to recover the Rs 600, alleging that the legal work which B had agreed to do for him had not been done The suit for the recovery of Rs 600 is barred Preonath v Bishnath (1907) 29 All 256 The above decision has been disented from by the High Court of Madras, on the ground that if several promissory notes are executed for portions of the same debt, each promissory note creates a distinct cause of action on which a separate suit may be brought Anantanarayana v Sarathi (1913) 36 Mad 151 158, 13 I C, 458

(5) Set off—A sues B for Rs 200 As against the said claim, B claims to set off Rs 200, being part of a sum of Rs 1,200 alleged to be due to him by A, but omits to counterclaim from A the balance of Rs 1 000 B cannot afterwards sue A to recover Rs 1 000 Naubut v Mahesh (1905) 32 Cal 634

(6) Continuous account—When a tradesman has a bill against a party for any amount in which the items are so connected together that it appears that the dealing is not intended to terminate with one contract but to be continuous so that one item if not paid shall be united with another and form one continuous demand, the whole together forms but one cause of action and cannot be divided Bonsay v Wardsworth (1856) 18 C B 325 331, Kedar Nath v Dinabandhu (1915) 42 Cal 1043, 31 I C 626

(7) Omission of portion of a claim in a suit against one of several promisors—The omission of a portion of a claim in a suit against one of several promisors is no bar to a subsequent suit against another promisor in respect of the portion so omitted A lets a house to B and C at a yearly rent of Rs 1 200 The rent for the whole of the years 1905, 1906 and 1907 is due and unpaid A sues B in 1908 for the rent due for 1907 A cannot afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1905 or 1906, but he can sue C for the rent due for those two years (1). See the illustration to the present rule.

(8) A suit for redemption of two out of three plots comprised in one mortgage is a bar to a subsequent suit for redemption of the third plot: Bhau Daji v Patlu (1922) 24 Bom L R 1157 73 I C 862, (23) A B 111.

(9) A suit by a reversioner against A to recover two out of three properties alienated to him by a Hindu widow having a limited interest is a bar to a subsequent suit against him to recover the third: Darbari v Gobind (1924) 46 All 822, 80 I C 31, (24) A A 92.

Explanation to the Rule :—

4 Obligation and collateral security for its performance—The Explanation to the present rule is not intended to be an illustration of the foregoing provision, but a substantive enactment making an obligation and a collateral security for its performance (which would otherwise be two independent causes of action) one cause of action for the purposes of the rule (v). In a recent case their Lordships of the Privy Council said (x).

The [Explanation] shows that a personal claim for the mortgage money under a mortgage and the enforcement of the security for the debt are to be regarded as one and the same cause of action. That provision is in marked distinction to the law of this country, where a mortgagee is at liberty to appoint a receiver under his deed to sue for the debt and to take proceedings for sale or foreclosure independently and at the same time.

It is important therefore in considering the effect of the code to bear in mind that the obvious intention is to establish a rule of law different from that accepted here. See notes below: 'First suit for interest due under a mortgage: second suit for principal on p 402' and 'Exceptions to the rule against splitting of reliefs,' on p 406.

B Successive claims arising under the same obligation constitute a single cause of action—The words "successive claims arising under the same obligation" have been added into the Explanation and the illustration to the rule has been expanded to give effect to a Calcutta decision where it was held that a claim in respect of all arrears of rent constitutes a single cause of action (y). The illustration shows that if rent has become due for the years 1905, 1906 and 1907, the landlord can bring only one suit for the whole of the rent in arrears and that if he sues for the rent due for a particular year only, he will be precluded from suing for the rent due for the other years. It must, however, be noted that though this rule precludes the landlord from bringing a fresh suit for rent not included in the former suit, it does not prevent him from adopting any other method the law gives him to recover the rent. Thus though in the case put in the illustration the landlord cannot sue for the rent due for the year 1905 or 1907, he can discontinue for the rent due for those years (z). On the same principle as in the illustration a suit for an annuity for the year 1917 is a bar to a subsequent suit for annuity for the years 1914, 1915 and 1916 (a). See also ill (7) above.

Interest accruing due from time to time under a mortgage deed, maintenance, malikana &c, are other instances of successive claims arising under the same obligation."

Distinct causes of action—If the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the first suit, the subsequent suit is not barred (b). What the rule requires is that every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising from one and the same cause of action and not that every suit shall include every claim or every cause of action which the plaintiff may have against the defendant (c). When the question is whether the cause of action in the subsequent suit is identical with that in the first suit, one great criterion is whether the same evidence will maintain both actions (d). For the meaning of cause of action, see notes above, "Cause of action."

(1) Different properties, different defendants—A, claiming as his father's heir, sues B for possession of a certain piece of land. He then sues C, also as his father's heir, for possession of another piece of land. The fact that both pieces of land are claimed by A under the same title does not preclude A from maintaining separate suits against B and C. Damparaboyina v Addala (1902) 25 Mad 736, Arayan v Shamrao (1903) 27 Bom 370, Ramchandra v Gajanan (1920) 44 Bom 352, 362, 56 I C 340.

(2) A suit brought by some members of a joint Hindu family against other members of the same family for partition of joint family property does not bar a second suit by the same plaintiffs for partition of other property belonging jointly to the family and strangers. Purushottam v Almaram (1899) 23 Bom 597.

(3) A sues B for specific performance of an agreement for the sale to him of B's land, and obtains a decree. In execution of the decree A is put in possession of a portion only of the land as it is found that the rest of the land did not belong to B, but to B's son. A subsequent suit by A against B for recovery of an aliquot portion of the price to the extent of the son's share is not barred under this rule, the cause of action being entirely distinct. Enkatarama v Enkata (1901) 21 Mad 27, Parangodan v Perum toduka (1904) 27 Mad 380.

(4) A suit by a Mahomedan widow for dower is no bar to a subsequent suit by her for a declaration of her right to possess for life her husband's estate in accordance with a proved local custom. Mahomed v Hasan Danu (1891) 21 Cal 157, 20 I A 153.

(5) A suit to eject a tenant holding under a lease is no bar to a subsequent suit against him for rent under the same lease. Subraja v Rathnavelu (1909) 32 Mad 330, 2 I C 313.

(6) The dismissal of a suit for a declaration of title under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act 1877, on the ground that the plaintiff, not being in possession, ought to have asked for possession also, is no bar to a subsequent suit for a declaration of title and for possession. Darbo v Keshoras (1879) 2 All 356, Sarsuti v Kun Behari Lal (1883) 8 All 315, Jibunti Nath v Shih Nath (1882) 8 Cal 819, Donoo Singh v Anand (1883) 12 Cal 291, Mohan Lal v Bilaso (1892) 14 All 512, Sayel Siliman v Bontala (1915) 39 Mad 247, 20 I C 418. Similarly the dismissal of a suit for an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's possession of certain lands on the ground that the plaintiff was not in possession is no bar to a subsequent suit for possession. Bande Ali v Gokul Maier (1912) 31 All 172, 13 I C 151.

(7) Promissory note—original cause of action—A sues B upon a promissory note, but the action fails owing to a material alteration in the note. A is not precluded from subsequently suing B on the original cause of action, i.e., from suing B to recover the consideration for which the note was given. The two causes of action are quite distinct. Lajina v Pana Lana (1911) 41 I A 142, 26 I C 228, Beni Pam v Pam Chandar (1914) 36 All 500, 26 I C 302. (8) A, alleging that he is entitled to one moiety of a piece of land and that B is entitled to the other moiety and alleging further that B, falsely claiming the ownership of the whole land, demolished the structures standing on A's moiety of the land and dispossessed A of his moiety, sues B for damages for demolition of the structures and appropriation of the materials. A decree is passed in the suit for A. Subsequently A, alleging that since the demolition of the structures B has been occupying the entire property to the exclusion of A by denying A a title thereto, sues B for a declaration of title to one moiety of the land and for separate possession thereof. Here the cause of action is the act of dispossession, and it being the same in both the suits, the second suit is barred under this rule. Khardah Company Ltd v Durga Charan (1919) 40 Cal 640, 39 I C 636.

(9) A suit by A against B to recover immoveable property in consequence of having been improperly turned out of possession, is no bar to a subsequent suit to recover from the same defendant moveable property in consequence of its wrongful detention. Pattapur Raja v Suriya Rau (1884) 8 Mad 520, 12 I A 116.

(10) A suit by reversioners against a Hindu widow for a declaratory decree and for an injunction forbidding alienations of her husband's property is no bar to a subsequent suit by them for a declaration that a gift made by her of the property is inoperative and cannot affect their reversionary rights. Chand Kour v Parlab Singh (1888) 15 I A 156, 16 Cal 98.

(12) The dismissal of a suit for rent on the ground that the plaintiff was not the landlord but that he and the defendant held the land as tenants in common, is no bar to a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff against the same defendant for partition of the land. Timappa v Manjamma (1923) 25 Bom L R 491, 73 I C 424, (23) A B 440.

(13) The dismissal of a suit for possession by A against B on the ground that B held the property as a mortgagee, is no bar to a subsequent suit by A against B for redemption. Jaimal v Ganeshi Mal (1923) 4 Lah 187, 73 I C 528, (24) A L 143.

(14) A mortgage deed contains a stipulation conferring upon the mortgagee the option to sue for interest or for possession in the event of the mortgagor's failure to pay interest at the stipulated time. The mortgagor fails to pay interest, and the mortgagee sues him for the interest. The mortgagor again fails to pay interest, and the mortgagee brings a suit against him for possession. The previous suit is not a bar to the subsequent suit. Parmeshree Das v Fakiria (1920) 1 Lah 457, 59 I C 71 (17 B).

For other cases see foot note (c).

First suit for possession subsequent suit for mesne profits prior to suit—It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (f), Madras (g) and Bombay (h), that a suit for possession of land is not a bar to a subsequent suit for mesne profits of such land accrued due prior to the institution of the suit for possession (i) the reason given being that the cause of action for possession is quite distinct from the cause of action for mesne profits.

2. 2. and, conversely, a suit for mesne profits is not a bar to a subsequent suit for possession (j) On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad (k) that a suit for possession is a bar to a subsequent suit for mesne profits accrued due prior to the date of the suit But it has been held by the same Court that a suit for possession is not a bar to a suit for mesne profits accrued due subsequent to the suit for possession (l) See O 20, r 12, see also notes to s 11, on p 67 above

First suit for interest due on a mortgage, second suit for principal—Where the principal secured by a mortgage has become due, and the mortgagee sues for interest only, the suit for interest is a bar to a subsequent suit for principal (m), unless there is a separate covenant for the payment of interest secured in a separate manner, e.g. a covenant enabling the mortgagee to sue for overdue interest without calling in the principal after the date fixed for the payment of principal (n)

In Muhammad Hafiz v Muhammad Zafar (o), A executed a simple mortgage in 1910 The mortgage provided by cl 2 that the interest should be paid monthly, and that if it was not paid for 6 months the mortgagee could realize either the unpaid interest only, or both the principal and interest, by bringing a suit without waiting for the expiration of the time provided for repayment of the principal By cl 7 it was provided that if the principal with interest was not paid within 3 years, the mortgagee should be entitled to sue for principal and interest In 1914, the mortgagee sued in respect of the interest due and obtained a decree In 1915 he brought a second suit in respect of the principal and the interest then due Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the second suit could not be maintained having regard to the provisions of this rule Their Lordships said "What was the cause of action that the plaintiffs possessed when the proceedings were first instituted? It was the cause of action due either to the fact that the interest had been unpaid for more than six months, or that the three years had elapsed, and the principal was also unpaid, and in either case they could have sued for realisation to provide for the whole amount secured by the deed Not having done so, they were debarred from instituting the second suit

The question came up again before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kishan Narain v Pala Mal (p) The rule to be deduced from that decision may be stated thus If a mortgage deed provides for the payment of principal and interest as independent obligations, a suit for a personal decree for the interest due is no bar to a subsequent suit to realize the principal In such a case the two causes of action are distinct But in the case of a mortgage deed which upon a default in the payment of interest gives the mortgagee the right to realize both the principal and interest, if the mortgagee, upon a default occurring, sues to realize the interest from the property O 2, r 2, precludes him from afterwards suing to realize the principal due, even if by his plaint in the first suit he has purported to reserve the right to do so The reason is that in such a case the cause of action—the non payment of the interest—gives rise to two forms of relief which the Code provides shall not be split see the Explanation to the Rule Their Lordships observed that if the mortgagees in their first suit claimed only a personal relief in respect of the unpaid interest, their case "would be on surer ground" But their claim in the first suit was for a decree for interest recoverable from the mortgaged property

First suit for produce payable under a mortgage, second suit for possession—By a mortgage bond it is provided that the mortgagor shall pay a share of the produce of the mortgaged land to the mortgagee every year, and that in default the mortgagee shall be entitled to take possession of the land. The mortgagor fails to pay the produce for the year 1896. In 1897 the mortgagee sues for the value of the produce for 1896, but he does not claim possession of the land as he was entitled to do under the bond. This suit is a bar to a subsequent suit for possession on the mortgagor's failure to pay the produce for subsequent years. The mortgagee ought to have claimed possession in the first suit (g). See notes below, "Omission to sue for one of several reliefs," ill (1).

Properties held under separate titles—A plaintiff is not bound to include in the same suit separate properties held by different persons under different titles (r). But he is bound to include in the same suit all properties held by the same defendant though under different titles (s).

Different causes of action arising from the same transaction—This rule does not require that when several causes of action arise from one transaction, the plaintiff should sue for all of them in one suit. What the rule lays down is that where there is one entire cause of action, the plaintiff cannot split the cause of action into parts so as to bring separate suits in respect of those parts. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Payana v. Pana Lana (t), the rule "is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action, and not to the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action, even though they arise from the same transaction." It was held in that case that a suit upon a promissory note, the suit failing owing to a material alteration in the note was not a bar to a subsequent suit to recover the consideration for which the promissory note was given.

In Anderson v. Kalagarla (u), A agreed to purchase 10 bales of yarn from B. A took delivery of 7 bales, but failed to pay the price of those bales, and as regards the remaining 3 bales refused to take delivery thereof. Garth, C.J., expressed the opinion that a suit by B against A to recover damages for failure to take delivery of the three bales was not a bar to a subsequent suit by B to recover from A the price of the 7 bales. The learned judge observed that a claim for the price of goods sold was a cause of action of a different nature from a claim for damages for the non-acceptance of goods, and the fact that both claims arose under the same contract did not constitute them one and the same cause of action. Wilson, J., expressed a different opinion, stating that the claims having arisen under the same contract, the cause of action was but one, and that the subsequent suit was therefore barred. The opinion of Wilson, J., was followed in Duncan v. Jeetmull (v), which also was a case of breach of one and the same contract. These two cases show that all existing breaches of the same contract must be joined in the same suit, but they have been held not to apply to the case where there are separate contracts, though contained in the same instrument (w). Thus where it is expressly provided by an indent that each monthly shipment and item should be treated as a separate contract, the plaintiff is entitled to bring a separate suit for damages in respect of each shipment (x). Conversely, where goods are delivered under separate orders, each order and delivery of goods is a separate contract and a separate cause of action unless it be proved that all the goods were delivered as under a single contract (x 2). See notes below, "He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted."

In this connection we may mention a point which was left open by their Lordships of the Privy Council, namely, whether a mortgagee who holds several mortgages on the same property, can treat them, with respect to the provisions of this rule, as separate causes of action, or whether he must bring one suit on all the mortgages (y) This question has since been decided by the Indian Courts, as to which see notes to s. 11 under the head, "Application of the above rules to suits on mortgage," p. 46 above

"Omits to sue."—This rule refers to cases where a suit has been filed and the plaintiff omits in such suit to sue in respect of a portion of the claim (z) It does not apply where no suit has been filed at all, as where a plaint is returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper court and the plaintiff does nothing further in the matter (a), nor does it apply where a suit is filed and subsequently withdrawn under O 23, r 1 (1), below (b)

"He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted"—The bar is not avoided by an expression of intention to sue again (c) Nor is it avoided by obtaining leave to sue in respect of 'the portion so omitted,' the reason is that the leave contemplated by this section is the leave to sue for one of several reliefs, referred to in sub r (3), it does not relate to "the portion so omitted" referred to in sub. r (2) (cc)

The rule says, 'he shall not afterwards sue' It does not therefore apply where the suits are simultaneous and not successive (d) But fractions of a day are recognized Hence where two plaints are presented on the same day, it must be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that the plaints were presented and admitted in the order in which their numbers appear in the register (e) See O 4, rr 1 2

It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the present rule refers to a case where there has been a suit in which there has been an omission to sue in respect of portion of a claim and a decree has been passed in that suit So long as no decree is passed, a second suit in respect of the portion so omitted is not barred It follows from this that where a suit brought in respect only of a portion of a cause of action has not been heard and decided, the Court may allow the plaintiff in the suit to be amended by adding the omitted portion of the claim (f) Similarly if such a suit is withdrawn under O 23, r 1 (2), with liberty to bring a fresh suit, the plaintiff may include in the fresh suit the portion that was omitted in the suit withdrawn by him (g)

A sues B in respect of a portion only of a cause of action Pending this suit A brings another suit against B in respect of the remaining portion of the same cause of action According to the Calcutta decision cited above neither suit is a bar to the other so long as no decree is passed in either suit It is open, therefore, to A to rectify his error in bringing two suits in respect of the same cause of action by applying for leave to amend the plaint in either suit by adding the omitted portion which forms the subject matter of the other suit, and then withdrawing the other suit under O 23, r 1 (1) The Chief Court of the Punjab has gone further and held that if in such a case A is allowed to withdraw either suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit under s. 23, r 1 (2), he is entitled to bring a fresh suit by virtue of the leave granted to him, though the other suit has been carried to a decision (h)

Omission to sue for one of several "reliefs"—Where a person is entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action, he may sue for all the reliefs or he may sue for one or more of them and reserve his right with the leave of the Court to sue for the rest (i) If no such leave is obtained, he will be precluded from afterwards suing for any relief so omitted (j) But if the right to the relief in respect of which a further suit is brought did not exist at the date of the institution of the former suit, the subsequent suit is not barred (l) The words in s 43 of the Code of 1882 were "with the leave of the Court obtained before the first hearing" Those words were construed literally, and it was held that leave might be applied for and obtained when the case was called on for first hearing and before anything had been done towards the hearing of the suit (l) The italicized words have been omitted with the result that the leave may now be granted at any stage of the suit The leave, however, must be obtained from the Court before which the original suit was pending The leave, if granted, is good even if the pecuniary value of the relief allowed to be omitted from the suit exceeds the pecuniary limits of the Court granting the leave (m)

Exceptions to the rule against splitting of reliefs—

1 Order 34, rule 14—Sub rule (3) provides that where a person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs, he cannot afterwards sue for any relief so omitted. According to this sub rule, if a mortgagee sues the mortgagor on the personal covenant to repay the mortgage debt, and omits to sue for sale of the mortgaged property, he cannot afterwards sue for sale unless he has resorted to his right to do so with the leave of the Court. To this, however, there is an exception, being that contained in O 34, r 14. The latter rule may be stated thus: a mortgagee sues the mortgagor to recover the mortgage debt from the mortgagor personally, and obtains a decree. He then applies for the attachment and sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree. The mortgaged property may be attached, but it cannot be sold in execution proceedings. The only mode of bringing it to sale is by instituting a fresh suit for sale. O 34, r 14, says that the mortgagee may institute such a suit notwithstanding anything contained in O 2, r 2 (n). The suit will be one under s 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. It must, however, be noted that though O 34, r 14, allows a mortgagee to split his remedies, it does not allow him to split his claim (o).

2 Order 34, rule II—The effect of this rule is that where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property, and the property is sold, but the net sale proceeds are not sufficient to pay the mortgage debt, he may subsequently apply for a decree for the balance, notwithstanding anything contained in O 2, r 2, although a claim to such relief has not been included in his suit (n). This, however, is not strictly an exception, for no separate suit has to be brought for a decree for the balance.

3 Deccan Agriculturists Relief Act, 1879 (as amended by Act XXII of 1882), s. 15 A.—The effect of the said section is to allow a mortgagor to split his remedies by providing in effect that if he sues the mortgagee for an account, he will not be precluded from suing him subsequently for redemption (q)

Leave to sue.—See notes "He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted," on p 404 and "Omission to sue for one of several reliefs," on p 405

Amendment of plaint.—See notes above, "He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted."

Withdrawal of one of two pending suits—See notes above, "He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted"

Minors.—The provisions of this rule apply to adults as well as minors. Thus a suit by a minor by his guardian and next friend for rent due for 1903 and 1904 will bar a subsequent suit by the minor, on attaining majority, for the rent due for 1901 and 1902. The acts of a guardian in the conduct of a suit must be upheld, unless it is shown that they were unreasonable or improper (r), or that the minor's interests were not properly safeguarded (s).

Official Assignee.—This rule merely bars a second suit. Therefore the Official Assignee cannot by an application to the Insolvency Court ask for a declaration on behalf of the insolvent mortgagor that the right of the mortgagee to sue for the principal is barred under this rule (as)

[illegible]

Execution proceedings—The present rule does not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree. A decree holder may therefore present successive applications for realizing different portions of his decree. Thus if a decree gives reliefs for possession and costs there is nothing in the Code which prevents separate and successive applications for execution as regards either of them (f)

3 [S 45 Cf R S C, O 18, r 1.] (1) Save as otherwise provided, a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendants jointly, and any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant or the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit

(2) Where causes of action are united, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit shall depend on the amount or value of the aggregate subject-matters at the date of instituting the suit

Scope of the rule—O 1, r 1 deals with joinder of plaintiffs. O 1 r 3 deals with joinder of defendants. The present rule deals with joinder of causes of action. It is to be read subject to the provisions of rr 4 and 5 below as is shown by the words 'save as otherwise provided' (u). It is also to be read subject to the provisions of O 1 rr 1 and 3. The frame of a suit may not be supported by this rule and yet it may be justified by O 1 r 1 or O 1, r 3 (v). Rules 6 and 7 of this Order are to be read with this rule.

Cause of action—See notes to s 20. Cause of action on p 90 above

One plaintiff, one defendant, and two or more causes of action—Where there is only one plaintiff and only one defendant the rule says that the plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant provided of course that the provisions of rr 4 and 5 of this Order are not contravened. If the causes of action are so disconnected that they cannot be conveniently tried together the Court may order separate trials under r 6 below. These trials however will not be distinct suits but they will be in the nature of sub-suits under the title and number of the principal suit from which they spring (u). In Saccharine Corporation Ltd v Hill (x) the plaintiff corporation the owners of twenty three patents for saccharin sued the defendant for alleged infringement of all the trade marks. There were thus twenty three causes of action united in one suit. It was ordered that the suit should be confined in the first instance to any three of the patents which the plaintiffs might select. Cullen MR said 'Now we start here with a writ launched covering twenty three causes of action. Prima facie in old days one cause of action was thought to be enough. That was gradually more or less relaxed and one cause of action was allowed to be coupled with one or two subordinate or necessarily connected causes of

2, r. 3. action Then came, by the Rules under the Judicature Acts, a still further relaxation, but always subject to the one underlying principle, namely, that the burden lay on the plaintiff to prove his case, and that no extra burden should be imposed on the defendant through the plaintiff needlessly enlarging the area of dispute. Prima facie, a dozen causes of action cannot be combined in one writ. they must be so intimately connected as to justify their being included in one writ, but when one finds no less than twenty three, that seems to me to be an outrageous extension of the latitude given by the rules to the plaintiff' (y) Cozens Hardy, L J, said "The action strikes me as almost an abuse of the process of the Court" (z)

The rule that a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant does not apply to suits for rent under the Agra Tenancy Act. Hence a plaintiff cannot join in one suit claims for arrears of rent of (1) occupancy and (2) non occupancy holdings, though the claims may be against the same defendant (a)

Misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action—Where there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action, the rule says that "any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant may unite such causes of action in the same suit". But the rule is to be read subject to the provisions of O 1, r 1. The result is that where there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action, they may be joined in one suit if the right to the relief and the causes of action arise from the same act or transaction and that there is a common question of law or fact, though they may not all be jointly interested in all the causes of action. But if the right to the relief claimed does not arise from the same act or transaction or if there is no common question of law or fact, the plaintiffs cannot all join in one suit unless they are jointly interested in the causes of action as provided by this rule (b). See notes to O 1, r 1, "New Rule," illis (1) to (4), on p 369 above.

Where the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in the causes of action united in one suit, the suit is said to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action. X sells to Y two plots of land adjoining each other, one of which is claimed by A by adverse possession and the other by B by adverse possession. Under the Code of 1882 A and B could not join together as plaintiffs in one suit against X and Y, for the evidence of adverse possession by A would not be evidence of adverse possession in favour of B and vice versa (c). The same would be the case under this Code. Similarly where five plaintiffs contract separately to sell cotton, though to the same defendant, they cannot all join in one suit for damages for breach of the five contracts (d).

Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action :—

Under the Code of 1882 where a plaint was presented which was bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action the Judge to whom the plaint was presented might return it for amendment under s 53. If the plaint, having been returned for amendment, was not amended, it might be rejected under s. 54, cl. (d). If the defect was not noticed when the plaint was presented, but was brought to the notice of the Court at a later stage, the Court might grant leave to the plaintiffs to amend the plaint within a time fixed by the Court, and might order that if the amendment was not made within the time prescribed, the suit should stand dismissed with costs. Where leave to amend was granted, the plaintiffs had to elect as to which of them should proceed with the suit, and the plaint had then

(y) (1) (1915) 45

to be amended by striking out the names of the other plaintiffs and making consequential amendments (e) At the same time liberty was given to the defendant to amend his written statement to meet the case of the particular plaintiff who had elected to proceed with the suit (f) It was also held in some cases under that Code that where a suit was bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, it was not proper to dismiss the suit without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of amendment (g) If the suit was dismissed, and the plaintiffs appealed, the appellate Court might set aside the decree and remand the case to the lower Court with a direction to that Court to return the plaint for amendment (h) As to the procedure to be followed under the present Code, see notes to r 7 below

Where the defendant objects to the frame of a suit on the ground that the suit is bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action but the objection is overruled, and a decree is passed for the plaintiffs, and the defendant appeals from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, the appellate Court should not interfere with the decree, though it may find that the suit is bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case. Such is the effect of the provisions of s 99 of this Code which provides inter alia that no decree shall be reversed or substantially varied in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action, where such misjoinder does not affect the merits of the case. The italicized words are new. They did not occur in the corresponding s 578 of the Code of 1882. They have been added into s 99 to supercede the practice followed by the Courts under the old Code. Under that Code where a decree was passed for the plaintiffs in a suit involving a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, and an appeal was preferred by the defendant from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action the course adopted by the appellate Court was to reverse the decree in appeal and remand the case to the lower Court with directions to that Court to return the plaint to the plaintiffs for amendment so that the plaintiffs might elect as to which of them should continue as plaintiffs in the suit (i). Such a course would not have been necessary if the Courts had held that a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action was an irregularity such as could be condoned under s 578. But it was held that a misjoinder of this kind was outside the scope of that section and hence the practice followed in appeal of reversing the decree and remanding the case (j). The effect of the provisions of s 99 is to preclude the appellate Court from reversing a decree on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action and remanding the case to the lower Court as was done under the old Code, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case.

Misjoinder of defendants and causes of action—Where there are two or more defendants and two or more causes of action, the rule says that the plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendants jointly.

Joint interest in the questions raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action against several defendants (k). If the causes of action alleged are separate and the defendants are arrayed in different suits the suit is bad

2, r 3 for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, technically multifariousness (l) "There is no provision in the Code allowing distinct causes of action against distinct sets of defendants that is to say, causes of action in which the defendants are not all jointly interested, to be united in one suit" (m) This rule, however, is to be read subject to the provisions of O 1, r 3, which relates to joinder of defendants. Hence two or more defendants may be joined as parties in one suit though there are two or more causes of action, provided the right to the relief claimed arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or fact, though they may not all be jointly interested in all the causes of action. But if the right to the relief claimed does not arise from the same act or transaction, or if there be no common question of law or fact the defendants cannot all be joined in one suit unless there is this rule. The joinder of defendants and causes of action

Suits held to be multifarious

1 B agrees to sell certain lands to A. A sues B and a third person C alleging that B was willing to execute the deed of sale, but that he was unable to do so, as C held possession of the title deeds under a false claim of an equitable lien upon the lands and that he had refused to deliver them up. As against B, A claims specific performance of the contract, and as against C he asks for a declaration that he has no lien upon the lands and for delivery up of the title deeds. The suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. The two causes of action are entirely distinct: they do not arise from the same transaction, nor would their trial involve any common question of law or fact. Luckumsey v Faulla (1881) 5 Bom 177, following De Houghton v Money (1876) L. R. 2 Ch. App. 166, distinguished in Krishnasami v Sundarappayyar (1895) 18 Mad 415.

What is laid down in De Houghton v Money and Luckumsey v Faulla is that "if on the face of the plaint, or of the plaintiff's case it appears that a third party, who was not a party to the contract upon which the suit was brought had a distinct interest but which interest is sought to be declared null and void upon some equitable ground, such a claim against the said third party could not be made a fact of the suit. In the case of De Houghton v Money it was admitted by the plaintiff that there was a conveyance in favour of Money, but it was said that that conveyance was executed under such circumstances as would make it a voidable one, and in the case of Luckumsey v Faulla it was distinctly admitted by the plaintiff that the third party who was not a party to the contract, had a distinct interest" (n). It is different, however, where A (purchaser) sues B (vendor) and C (vendor's benamidar) claiming specific performance against B and a declaration against C that C is a mere benamidar. In such a case, the two defendants are identical and there is but one cause of action. There is therefore no misjoinder. Mokund Lal v Chotal Lal (1884) 10 Cal 1061, 1068 1069.

See this case commented upon in Aiyathurai v Mulamad Meera (1908) 18 Mad L.J. 238, 243-244.

4 A joint Hindu family, consisting of 3 members—B and C, owns several properties. A agrees to sell his share to P. A fails to execute the necessary sale deed. P sues A for specific performance, and includes in the suit a claim for partition and possession against all the members of the family—namely, A, B and C. The suit is bad for misjoinder. The claim for partition cannot be joined with the claim for specific performance, as at the date of the suit the plaintiff had no right to sue for partition not having completed his title by a sale deed. Wallis, C.J., said: "The other members of the family were no parties to the alleged contract and therefore were not proper parties to the suit in so far as it is a suit for specific performance, and it would in my opinion be a distinct hardship to them to force them to defend a suit for partition which would not lie if the plaintiff failed to prove his contract." Rangayya v Subramania (1917) 40 Mad 305, 40 I.C. 423 [F.B.] See ill (1) above.

In ill (1) and (3) what were really two suits were combined into one. In ill (2) what were really seven suits were united in one suit. In all these cases it was held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. The reason why the law forbids a joinder in one suit of distinct causes of action against different defendants each of whom is unconnected with the cause of action against the others, may thus be stated in the words of Peacock, C.J. (p) "Such a joinder complicates the case before the Judge, and renders it exceedingly difficult for him in dealing with the case of each defendant to exclude from his consideration those portions of the evidence which may not be admissible against him though admissible against one or more of the others. Moreover, it is vexatious and harassing to the different defendants. Such a procedure renders it almost compulsory on all the defendants to be present either in person or by their pleaders, whilst the case is going on again & the others in respect of matters in which they are not interested and, moreover, it is harassing and inconvenient as regards the attendance of the witnesses of the several defendants as it renders it necessary for the witnesses of each to be present and to be detained whilst the case of the others is being heard and determined. For further illustrations see notes to O 1, r 3 under the heads "New Rule, p 373 above, and Severally p 376 above."

Procedure in case of multifariousness (misjoinder of defendants and causes of action).—Under the Code of 1852 where a plaint was presented which was

, r. 3. bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, the Judge to whom the plaint was presented might return it for amendment under s 53. If the plaint, having been returned for amendment, was not amended, it might be rejected under sec 54, cl (d). If the defect was not noticed when the plaint was presented, but was brought to the notice of the Court at a later stage, the Court might, on the application of the plaintiff, and on such terms as to costs as the Court thought proper, grant leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit against those defendants who were not interested in the cause of action in respect of which he elected to proceed with liberty to bring a fresh suit or suits against them (q) [O 23, r 1], or allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint by striking out the names of those defendants and making consequential amendments. Where leave to amend was granted to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff did not amend within the time fixed by the Court, and the suit was dismissed, the appellate Court might confirm the decree if it found that the suit was multifarious (r). As to the procedure to be followed under the present Code, see notes to r 7 below.

Where the defendants object to the frame of a suit on the ground that the suit is multifarious, but the objection is overruled, and a decree is passed for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be multifarious, the appellate Court should not interfere with the decree, though it may find that the suit is multifarious, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case. It is so provided by s 99, which declares inter alia that no decree shall be reversed or substantially varied in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action, where such misjoinder does not affect the merits of the case. The words italicized above are new. They did not occur in the corresponding s 578 of the Code of 1882. They have been inserted in s 99 to supersede the practice followed by the Courts under the old Code. Under that Code, where a decree was passed for the plaintiffs in a suit which was bad for multifariousness, and an appeal was preferred by the defendants from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be multifarious, the course adopted by the appellate Court was either to reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit (s), or to sustain the decree of the lower Court as against a particular set of defendants in respect of the causes of action in which they were jointly interested, and grant permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit against the other defendants with liberty to bring a fresh suit or suits against them (t). Such a course would not have been necessary had the Courts held that a misjoinder of defendants and causes of action was an irregularity such as could be cured by s 578. But it was held that the section did not apply to a misjoinder of this kind and that even if it did apply, the misjoinder should be regarded as a defect that must affect the merits of the case within the meaning of that section (u). The insertion of the words "on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action" in s 99 makes it quite clear that the appellate Court should not interfere with a decree at all where the only objection to the decree is that of multifariousness, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case.

Two or more defendants and one cause of action—Every case of O. 2, multifariousness presupposes more than one cause of action. Hence where there is only one cause of action, there can be no multifariousness.

Suits held not to be multifarious

1 A, alleging that his brother B mortgaged his (A's) share in his father's property to C without his knowledge and consent, and that C was in possession as mortgagee, sues B and C for a declaration of title to his share of the property, and for possession of the share. The suit is not bad for multifariousness, for there are no two causes of action, but only one, namely, the infringement of A's right of ownership by B. The mortgage and dispossession are both acts evidencing the infringement of A's right. Indur Kuar v Gur Prasad (1859) 11 All 33, Un-har Ali v Sayyad Husain (1902) 24 All 353, Kubra Jan v Pam Dali (1903) 30 All 560.

2 A sells three properties by private contract to B. After the sale to B, all the three properties are attached in execution of a decree held by C against A, and they are sold in execution to D, E and F, respectively. A suit by B against A (the vendor), C (the decree holder) and D, E and F (execution purchasers) to set aside the execution sale, is not bad for multifariousness. Haranund v Prosunno Chunder (1883) 11 Cal 763, Gumani v Ram Charan (1878) 1 All 555.

Note—In the Calcutta case cited above, Garth, C J, said "The plaintiff has but one object, namely, to establish his private purchase as against the claim in execution, and the defendants who contest his claim have but one defence, which is common to them all, viz, that the plaintiff's purchase is invalid."

Unnecessary parties added as defendants—Where persons who are not necessary parties are joined as defendants, they should be deemed not to be parties at all in considering whether or not the suit is bad for multifariousness. A and B are two co-sharers of a village. A and B sell their respective shares to C by two separate deeds of sale. D, alleging that he is entitled to pre-empt the property, sues A, B and C for pre-emption. Here the suit is not bad for multifariousness, for A and B being vendors, they are not necessary parties to a suit for pre-emption. The suit is really against the vendee, C (1).

Suit for ejectment by the real owner against holders under derivative titles from a trespasser as the common source—In a suit for possession all persons claiming by derivative titles from a trespasser as the common source may be joined as defendants. A obtains a lease of a piece of land from B, and enters into possession of the land. Subsequently B, ignoring the lease, lets the land in separate portions and by separate leases to C, D and E. A sues B, C, D and E to eject them from the land. The suit is not bad for multifariousness. In this as in every action of ejectment, there is but one cause of action, namely, dispossession. It is immaterial that C, D and E claim under different titles. The title by which they claim forms no part of the plaintiff's cause of action (2). It is different however, if they do not all claim under the same trespasser. Thus if A owns lands and he is dispossessed of one portion by B, of another portion by C, and of a third portion by D, A cannot bring one suit for possession against B, C and D (3).

2, r. 3. Where two or more persons conspire together to commit a wrong, or to commit a breach of several contracts entered into with them separately by the plaintiff, they may all be joined as defendants in one suit—The reason is that the plaintiff has in such a case but one cause of action against all the defendants, namely, a conspiracy to do the act complained of. Thus if in ill (2) on p 410 above, the seven salt manufacturers had conspired together not to deliver the salt to A, A could have brought one suit against them all. Similarly, if A and B conspire together to assault C, C may bring one suit against them for damages for assault (y). Upon the same principle where A obtained a decree against B for possession of certain lands in which 86 persons had distinct and separate tenures, and these 86 persons combined together to keep A out of possession and declined to pay the rent to him, it was held that A might join the 86 tenants as defendants in one suit for a declaration of his proprietary right to the lands (z). But separate suits should be brought if there is no collusion or combination between the tenants (a).

Two or more plaintiffs, two or more defendants, and two or more causes of action—In such a case the plaintiffs must be jointly interested in the causes of action, and the defendants also must be jointly interested in the causes of action. The rule says 'Any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit'. If the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in the causes of action, the suit will be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action. If the plaintiffs are jointly interested in the several causes of action, but the defendants are not, the suit will be bad for multifariousness. And if neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants are jointly interested in the causes of action, the suit will be bad for a double misjoinder, namely, misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action and misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. Thus if A agrees to sell and deliver salt to B, and C agrees to sell and deliver salt to D, and B and D sue A and C for damages for breach of the contracts entered into with them respectively, the suit is bad for a double misjoinder. Neither plaintiff has any interest in the cause of action of the other, nor has either defendant any interest in the cause of action against the other. But if two contracts are entered into each between B and D of the one part and A and C of the other part, B and D may bring one suit against A and C on the two contracts.

Jurisdiction—Where a plaintiff combines several causes of action against the same defendant in one suit, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit depends on the value of the aggregate subject matters (b). See sub r (2).

Revision—It has been held by the High Court of Madras that a decision on the question whether a suit is bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action is subject to revision (c).

4. [S. 44, R.S.C., O 18, r 2] No cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property, except—

Only certain claims to be joined for recovery of immoveable property

- (a) claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed or any part thereof,
- (b) claims for damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof is held, and
- (c) claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action

Provided that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to prevent any party in a suit for foreclosure or redemption from asking to be put into possession of the mortgaged property

Old section—This rule corresponds with s 44 C P C, 1882, except in the following particulars—

- 1 The rule contained in s 44 applied to (1) suits for the recovery of immoveable property, and to (2) suits to obtain a declaration of title to immoveable property. The words or to obtain a declaration of title to immoveable property, have been omitted in this rule so that the operation of the present rule is confined only to those cases where a cause of action is sought to be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property.
- 2 Clause (c) of the rule is new. See notes below. Claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action.
- 3 The proviso to the rule is also new. It is taken from R S C O 18 r 2.

Joinder of claims—This rule deals with what may be called joinder of claims. It declares that no claims other than those specified in the three exceptions shall be joined without the leave of the Court with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property. The object of the rule is to prevent a joinder with a claim for the recovery of immoveable property of claims of other and dissimilar character. If it is sought to join such claims with a claim for the recovery of immoveable property the leave of the Court must first be obtained and such leave may be granted if the two classes of claims can be conveniently disposed of in one suit. But no leave is necessary where claims are joined in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action [see cl (c)].

This rule does not apply to a joinder of several claims all for the recovery of immoveable property. A plaintiff may therefore bring one suit for possession of several immoveable properties without the leave of the Court. Thus if A owns 29 parcels of land and he is dispossessed of all of them by B A may without the leave of the Court bring one suit against B for the recovery of all the plots. Here there is a joinder of 29 claims but they are all claims for the recovery of immoveable property (d). Similarly if A owns two plots of land in respect of which B is entitled to pre-emption and A sells both the plots to C on the same day by two separate deeds of sale B may claim pre-

2, r. 4 exemption of both the plots in one suit without the leave of the Court (c) On the same principle, a mortgagee holding two mortgage deeds over separate properties from the same person may join both in one suit for sale or foreclosure, without the leave of the Court (f)

Suit for the recovery of immoveable property—An action to establish title to immoveable property not claiming possession, is not an action for the recovery of immoveable property within the meaning of this rule so as to require the leave of the Court for its joinder with another cause of action (9). Similarly, an action to restrain trespass on immoveable property is not an action for the recovery of immoveable property (1). A suit for a declaration that an alleged mortgage is not a mortgage and for possession or in the alternative for an account and for redemption, does not require the leave of the Court under this rule. 'In either case he [plaintiff] asks for possession—possession at once if there is no valid mortgage, and possession upon payment of what may be found due if the mortgage is valid' (1). A suit for recovery of a mortgage debt with an alternative prayer for sale of the mortgaged property, is not a suit for the recovery of immoveable property within the meaning of this rule (2).

Claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action —

1. Joinder of claims for recovery both of moveable and immovable property—This rule is to be read with r 2 above which directs that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action (k). Hence there is nothing irregular in seeking to recover immovable and moveable property in one suit without the leave of the Court, if the cause of action is the same in respect of both. Nay if the plaintiff in such a case sues to recover only one of the two kinds of property, he will be precluded from suing for the other by virtue of the provisions of r 2 above. Thus where a Mahomedan died leaving two heirs, A and B, and C purchased from A certain immovable property which had come to A's share, and from B certain moveable property which had come to B's share, and both the properties were at the time of purchase in the wrongful possession of D, it was held that not only could C sue D for the recovery of both the moveable and immovable property in one suit without the leave of the Court, but that if he did not do so he would be precluded from afterwards suing for the property omitted in the first suit (l). In the above case the cause of action in respect of both the properties was the same, namely, dispossession and refusal to deliver the property on demand. But if the cause of action is not the same a claim for the recovery of moveable property may not be joined with a claim for the recovery of immovable property without the leave of the Court (m). Thus a claim against an administrator for damages for misfeasance under ss 146 and 147 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, cannot be joined with a claim for recovery by the plaintiff of his share of immovable properties alleged to have been bought by the administrator with money belonging jointly to the plaintiff and the administrator (n).

2 A plaintiff may join, without the leave of the Court, in an action for the recovery of immovable property, other claims, such as a claim for a declaration of title for an account of the rents and profits, for the appointment of a receiver, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from receiving the rents, provided such claims do not amount to a new cause of action, and are 'mere machinery' (v)

Proviso to the rule—The proviso to the rule enables a plaintiff to claim in one suit redemption or foreclosure and possession (p).

Leave of Court—Objection as to misjoinder.—Leave should be obtained before the plaint is filed (g). But the leave under this rule is not a condition precedent to jurisdiction, and it may therefore be granted on good cause shown even after the institution of the suit (r). Under s 44 of the Code of 1882 it was held that an objection that the plaintiff had joined together claims which, under that section could not be joined together without the leave of the Court, should be taken in the Court of first instance, and that if it was not so taken, it should be regarded as waived, and it should not be entertained by the Court of appeal (s). Under this Code, the objection should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement if it is not so taken, it will be deemed to have been waived (r 7 below). And even if the objection is taken in time and disallowed, the appellate Court should not interfere with the decree in appeal merely on the ground that claims which ought not to be joined under this rule have been joined in one suit unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case (s 99 above).

Where a claim cannot be joined with a claim for the recovery of immoveable property without the leave of the Court, it is optional with the plaintiff either to obtain the leave and bring one suit in respect of both the claims, or to bring separate suits in respect of each of them. The plaintiff is not confined to the first only of these two courses (t).

Counterclaim—This rule applies to a counterclaim as well as to an original action (u).

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order under this rule rejecting an application for leave to join a claim with a claim for the recovery of immoveable property (v). See s 99 above.

5. [S. 44, R. S. C., O. 18, r. 5.] No claim by or against an executor, administrator, or heir, as such, shall be joined with claims by or against him personally, unless the last-mentioned claims are alleged to arise with reference to the estate in respect of which the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued as executor, administrator or heir, or such as he was entitled to, or liable for, jointly with the deceased person whom he represents.

Scope of the rule—This rule provides that no claim by a person in his representative character shall be joined in the same suit with claims by him personally, nor shall claims against a person in his representative character be joined with claims against him personally—

- (1) unless the claims by or against him personally arise with reference to the estate which he represents, or
- (2) unless he was entitled to, or liable for, those claims jointly with the deceased person whom he represents.

- r. 5. The object of the rule is to prevent an executor or administrator from intermingling the assets of his testator with his own moneys (w)

(a) A is a tenant for life of certain property, and B is the remainderman. A gives a lease of the property to C. A dies leaving a will of which B is the sole executor. Some months after A's death, B sues C (1) for arrears of rent due to the estate of A, and (2) for rent due to him personally subsequent to A's death. Here the first claim is by C as executor, and the second claim is by him personally as remainderman. The claim by C personally does not arise with reference to the estate of A of which C is executor. The two claims therefore cannot be joined together in the same suit. Tredgar v Roberts [1914] 1 K. B. 283

(b) A dies leaving a will of which B is the executor. By his will A directs B to continue his business. The executor purchases for the purposes of A's business certain goods from C in his own name. C may in such a case sue B for the price of the goods, and he may claim the price against B personally, or, in the alternative, against him as executor. The reason is that the personal claim against B arises with reference to the estate of which he is the executor. But if B purchased certain goods from C as executor in the course of the administration of A's estate and other goods under a separate contract altogether in his own name and expressly for the purpose of his own business, C cannot join both claims against B in one suit (x)

(c) A and B carry on business in partnership. A dies leaving a son S who obtains letters of administration to his father's estate. After A's death S and B continue the business in partnership with the old partnership assets. S, as administrator, sues B for the accounts of the partnership between his father A and B. He also claims dissolution of the partnership between him personally and B, and for his share in the partnership. The suit does not offend the provisions of this rule, as the personal claim of S in respect of the partnership between him and B arises with reference to the estate in respect of which he is suing as administrator. Arunachellam v Arunnachellam (1922) 43 Mad. L. J. 219. 99 I. C. 966, (1922) A. N. 436

(d) The second branch of the rule may be illustrated by the following case. A and B jointly purchase goods from C. A dies leaving a will of which B is the executor. Here A and B are jointly liable for the price of the goods. C may therefore sue B for the price in his (B's) personal as well as representative character. If A and B had purchased goods from C under separate contracts, C ought to bring two separate suits against B, one as A's executor to recover the price of goods sold to A, and the other against B personally to recover the price of the goods sold to him (B).

Heir as such—An heir may sue or be sued in his personal capacity, or he may sue or be sued in his representative capacity [see notes to O. 7, r. 4]. The words 'claim by an heir as such' in this rule refer to a claim by him in his representative capacity, that is as representing the estate of the deceased whose heir he claims to be (y)

Power of Court to order separate trials

This rule does not apply to cases of misjoinder but to cases where several causes of action have been properly joined in one suit and the causes of action so joined cannot be conveniently tried together (a). See notes to r. 3, "One plaintiff, one defendant, and two or more causes of action," on p. 407 above.

7. [New] All objections on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived.

Objection as to misjoinder

Objection as to misjoinder of causes of action.—This rule is new. Under the Code of 1882 when a plaint was presented which was bad for misjoinder of causes of action, it might have been returned for amendment under s. 53 at any time before the settlement of issues. If the plaint, having been returned for amendment, was not amended, it might have been rejected under s. 54, cl. (d). These provisions were by no means exhaustive, and the procedure followed in cases of misjoinder of causes of action was not uniform. These provisions have not been re-enacted, and instead of them we have the present rule which places objections on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action on the same footing as objections on the ground of non joinder and

5. The object of the rule is to prevent an executor or administrator from intermingling the assets of his testator with his own moneys (w)

Illustrations

(a) A is a tenant for life of certain property, and B is the remainderman. A gives a lease of the property to C. A dies leaving a will of which B is the sole executor. Some months after A's death, B sues C (1) for arrears of rent due to the estate of A, and (2) for rent due to him personally subsequent to A's death. Here the first claim is by C as executor, and the second claim is by him personally as remainderman. The claim by C personally does not arise with reference to the estate of A of which C is executor. The two claims therefore cannot be joined together in the same suit. Tredegar v Roberts [1914] 1 K B 283

(b) A dies leaving a will of which B is the executor. By his will A directs B to continue his business. The executor purchases for the purposes of A's business certain goods from C in his own name. C may in such a case sue B for the price of the goods, and he may claim the price against B personally, or, in the alternative, against him as executor. The reason is that the personal claim against B arises with reference to the estate of which he is the executor. But if B purchased certain goods from C as executor in the course of the administration of A's estate and other goods under a separate contract altogether in his own name and expressly for the purpose of his own business, C cannot join both claims against B in one suit (x).

(c) A and B carry on business in partnership. A dies leaving a son S who obtains letters of administration to his father's estate. After A's death S and B continue the business in partnership with the old partnership assets. S, as administrator, sues B for the accounts of the partnership between his father A and B. He also claims dissolution of the partnership between him personally and B, and for his share in the partnership. The suit does not offend the provisions of this rule, as the personal claim of S in respect of the partnership between him and B arises with reference to the estate in respect of which he is suing as administrator. Arunachellam v Arunachellam (1922) 43 Mad L J 218, 69 I C 966, (22) A M 436

(d) The second branch of the rule may be illustrated by the following case. A and B jointly purchase goods from C. A dies leaving a will of which B is the executor. Here A and B are jointly liable for the price of the goods. C may therefore sue B for the price in his (B's) personal as well as representative character. If A and B had purchased goods from C under separate contracts, C ought to bring two separate suits against B—one as A's executor to recover the price of goods sold to A, and the other against B personally to recover the price of the goods sold to him (B).

Heir as such.—An heir may sue or be sued in his personal capacity, or he may sue or be sued in his representative capacity [see notes to O 7, r 4]. The words 'claim by an heir as such' in this rule refer to a claim by him in his representative capacity, that is as representing the estate of the deceased whose heir he claims to be (y).

two claims cannot be joined in one suit This contention is not sound, for the second claim cannot be said to be by an heir as such The claim is made by the widow not as representing her husband's estate and for the benefit of the estate, but for her own and personal benefit The two claims may therefore be joined in one suit Ahmad ud din v Sikander (1896) 18 All 256

6. [S. 45, 2nd para R. S. C., O. 18, r. 1] Where it appears to the Court that any causes of action joined in one suit cannot be conveniently tried or disposed of together, the Court may order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient

This rule does not apply to cases of misjoinder, but to cases where several causes of action have been properly joined in one suit and the causes of action so joined cannot be conveniently tried together (a) See notes to r 3, 'One plaintiff, one defendant, and two or more causes of action,' on p 407 above

7. [New] All objections on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived

2. r 7. misjoinder of parties [O 1, r 13] Such objections must be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived. S 99 provides that no decree shall be reversed or varied on account of any misjoinder of causes of action not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.

But though the provisions of s 53 and s 54, cl (d), of the Code of 1882 are not reproduced in this Code, the Court may allow an amendment under O 6, r 17, on the application of the plaintiff. It may also direct the plaintiff under the same rule to amend the plaint on the application of the defendant or, where there are two or more defendants, on the application of any one of them. O 6, r 18, deals with failure to amend after order.

As under the old Code, so under this Code, the Court may, where a suit is bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, direct the plaintiffs to elect as to which of them shall proceed with the suit, and where a suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, direct them to elect against which defendants they would proceed and direct all necessary amendments to be made within a time to be prescribed by the Court. If the plaintiff does not comply with the order and amend the plaint the Court may have the action stayed.

The misjoinder of causes of action referred to in this rule is not only the misjoinder contemplated by r 3 above, but that contemplated by rr 4 and 5 above.

ORDER III.

Recognised Agents and Pleaders

- 1. 1. [S 36] Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognized agent, or by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf.

Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so directs, be made by the party in person.

Appearance—If a recognized agent, although able to do so, does not conduct the case on behalf of his principal his mere presence in Court is not an 'appearance' in the suit within the meaning of r 6 or r 8 of O 9 (b). See notes to O 9, r 9. Meaning of Appearance "

Duly appointed—When a suit is brought by a person professing to act as another person's agent, the Court has the power to enquire into the agent's authority (c). A pleader appointed by an official liquidator who has obtained the sanction of the Court to institute a suit is "duly appointed" within the meaning of this rule, though no sanction was obtained for the appointment of the pleader (d) Where a party to a suit authorizes an agent by special power of attorney to appoint a pleader to sign execution petitions, a pleader appointed by the agent to support a petition verified by the agent is "a pleader duly appointed to act on his" (the party's) "behalf" within the meaning of this rule (e)

Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis—Such an application cannot be made by a recognized agent (f) See O 33, r 3

2. [S 37.] The recognized agents of parties by whom such appearances, applications and acts may be made or done are—

Recognized agents

- (a) persons holding powers-of-attorney, authorizing them to make and do such appearances, applications and acts on behalf of such parties,
- (b) persons carrying on trade or business for and in the names of parties not resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court within which limits the appearance, application or act is made or done, in matters connected with such trade or business only, where no other agent is expressly authorized to make and do such appearances, applications and acts

Clause (a) amended by the Bombay High Court under s 122—See Appendix IV below, Rules made by the High Court of Bombay Where a power of attorney, instead of being a general power as required by r 2 (a) as amended by the Bombay High Court was a special power, it was held that it was a defect not affecting the merits of the case within the meaning of s 99, and that the decree should not be disturbed in appeal (g)

Clause (b)—Where a plaint is signed and presented by the plaintiff's clerk who has no authority from the plaintiff to carry on business in the plaintiff's name, the plaint cannot be said to have been signed by the plaintiff's recognized agent In such a case the Court may rightly dismiss the suit (h)

3. [S 38] (1) Processes served on the recognised agent of a party shall be as effectual as if the same had been served on the party in person, unless the Court otherwise directs

Service of process on recognised agent

(2) The provisions for the service of process on a party to a suit shall apply to the service of process on his recognized agent.

0. 3. Service of process on recognised agent.—A person holding a power of attorney is not bound to accept service of summons; he may refuse to do so, for he is not bound to act under the power (a)

4. [S. 39.] (1) The appointment of a pleader to make or do any appearance, application or act for any person shall be in writing, and shall be signed by such person or by his recognized agent or by some other person duly authorized by power-of-attorney to act in this behalf.

(2) Every such appointment, when accepted by a pleader, shall be filed in Court, and shall be considered to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court, by a writing signed by the client or the pleader, as the case may be, and filed in Court, or until the client or the pleader dies or until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client.

(3) No advocate of any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or of any Chief Court, and no advocate of any other High Court who is a barrister shall be required to present any document empowering him to act.

Sub-rule (2): acceptance by pleader.—This rule does not require the acceptance of a vakalatnama to be in writing. But where, by the rules of the Court, the acceptance is required to be in writing, and it is not in writing, the pleader should not be heard by the Court (j)

Sub-rule (3)—The words "and no advocate of any other High Court who is a barrister" are new.

Delegation of authority by pleader—Where a pleader cannot attend, he has no power to delegate his authority to another pleader (l)

"Until determined with the leave of the Court."—A pleader cannot determine his appointment without the leave of the Court after reasonable notice to the client (l). But no formality is necessary about the leave of the Court (m). An attorney's retainer cannot be revoked by his client by a mere letter; it can only be revoked with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by the client and filed in Court as provided in this rule (n)

Advocate—An advocate, unlike a pleader, may be verbally appointed (nn). See sub r (3)

Institution of Suits

1. [S 48] (1) Every suit shall be instituted by presenting a plaint to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf

(2) Every plaint shall comply with the rules contained in Orders VI and VII, so far as they are applicable

Plaint presented to judge at club after office hours.—There is nothing in this rule to show that the presentation of the plaint must be during office hours or must be to the officer appointed at the Court or at any particular place. A judge therefore may accept a plaint at his residence or at his club after office hours if presented to him at that place. In so doing the judge constitutes himself an officer to receive the plaint (c)

ORDER V.

Issue and Service of Summons

ISSUE OF SUMMONS

O 5,
r 1-3

1 [S 64] (1) When a suit has been duly instituted a summons may be issued to the defendant to appear and answer the claim on a day to be therein specified

Summons

Provided that no such summons shall be issued when the defendant has appeared at the presentation of the plaint and admitted the plaintiff's claim

(2) A defendant to whom a summons has been issued under sub rule (1) may appear—

(a) in person, or

(b) by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, or

(c) by a pleader accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions

(3) Every such summons shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court

Decree without issue of summons—The proviso to sub r (1) contemplates cases where a decree may be passed against a defendant without issue or service of summons upon him (p)

2 [S 65] Every summons shall be accompanied by a copy of the plaint or, if so permitted, by a concise statement

Copy or statement annexed to summons

3 [S 66] (1) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the defendant, the summons shall order him to appear in person in Court on the day therein specified

Court may order defendant or plaintiff to appear in person

(2) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the plaintiff on the same day, it shall make an order for such appearance

Consequence of non-attendance—As to the consequence of non attendance in person, see O 9, r 12

Non attendance of party on adjourned date—Where an order is made under this rule for the personal appearance of a party on a specified day he is not bound to appear personally on any adjourned date unless a fresh order is made requiring his appearance on that date. Where no fresh order is made, and the Court disposes of the suit under O 9 r 12 the order is one made without jurisdiction (g)

No party to be ordered to appear in person unless resident within certain limits

4 [S 67] No party shall be ordered to appear in person unless he resides—

(a) within the local limits of the Court's ordinary original jurisdiction, or

(b) without such limits but at a place less than fifty or (where there is railway or steamer communication or other established public conveyance for five-sixths of the distance between the place where he resides and the place where the Court is situated), less than two hundred miles distance from the court house

5 [S 68] The Court shall determine, at the time of issuing the summons, whether it shall be for the settlement of issues only, or for the final disposal of the suit, and the summons shall contain a direction accordingly.

Provided that, in every suit heard by a Court of Small Causes, the summons shall be for the final disposal of the suit

Summons for final disposal—As a general rule summonses for final disposal of suits should be issued only in simple cases (r)

6 [S 69] The day for the appearance of the defendant shall be fixed with reference to the current business of the Court the place of residence of the defendant and the time necessary for the service of the summons, and the day shall be so fixed as to allow the defendant sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer on such day

O. 5, 7 [S 70] The summons to appear and answer shall order the defendant to produce all documents in his possession or power upon which he intends to rely in support of his case

Summons to order defendant to produce documents relied on by him

8 [S 71] Where the summons is for the final disposal of the suit, it shall also direct the defendant to produce, on the day fixed for his appearance, all witnesses upon whose evidence he intends to rely in support of his case

On issue of summons for final disposal defendant to be directed to produce his witnesses

Service of Summons

9 [S 72] (1) Where the defendant resides within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is instituted or has an agent resident within that jurisdiction who is empowered to accept the service of the summons, the summons shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, be delivered or sent to the proper officer to be served by him or one of his subordinates

Delivery or transmission of summons for service

(2) The proper officer may be an officer of a Court other than that in which the suit is instituted, and, where he is such an officer, the summons may be sent to him by post or in such other manner as the Court may direct

10 [S 73] Service of the summons shall be made by delivering or tendering a copy thereof signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints in this behalf, and sealed with the seal of the Court

Mod. of service

Object of service—The object of the service of a summons in whatever way it may be effected (other than substituted service to which other considerations apply) is that the defendant may be informed of the institution of the suit in due time before the date fixed for the hearing (s). See notes to r 1st below. Service of summons.

11 [S 74] Save as otherwise prescribed, where there are more defendants than one, service of the summons shall be made on each defendant

Service on several defendants

Partners—As to service on partners see O 30 r 3.

- 12 [S 75] Wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person, unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient

Service to be on defendant in person when practicable or on his agent

- 13 [S 76] (1) In a suit relating to any business or work against a person who does not reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court from which the summons is issued, service on any manager or agent, who, at the time of service, personally carries on such business or work for such person within such limits, shall be deemed good service

Service on agent by whom defendant carries on business

- (2) For the purpose of this rule the master of a ship shall be deemed to be the agent of the owner or charterer

Manager or agent personally carrying on business—The manager or agent contemplated by this rule is one who has an initiative and independent discretion albeit subject possibly to general orders for his guidance. A mere servant employed to carry out orders or to execute a particular commission or a factor or commission agent who is not identified with the firm for which he acts, is not such an agent (1)

- 14 [S 77.] Where in a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property, service cannot be made on the defendant in person, and the defendant has no agent empowered to accept the service, it may be made on any agent of the defendant in charge of the property

Service on agent in charge in suits for immoveable property

- 15 [S 78] Where in any suit the defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the defendant who is residing with him

Where service may be on male member of defendant's family

Explanation—A servant is not a member of the family within the meaning of this rule

Service on adult male member—Where no attempt is made to find the defendant, and the summons is served on his son the summons cannot be said to be duly served. The inquiry as to the whereabouts of the defendant must not be perfunctory (u) acknowledgment tenders a copy of the summons to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, he shall require the signature of the person to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons

Refusal to sign acknowledgment—A mere refusal to sign an acknowledgment of service is not an offence under s 173 or s 180 of the Indian Penal Code (v)

17 [S 86] Where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the Procedure when a defendant refuses to accept service or cannot be found serving officer, after using all due and reasonable diligence, cannot find the defendant, and there is no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and shall then return the original to the Court from which it was issued, with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed

The old section—This section corresponds with s 80 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

- 1 The words 'after using all due and reasonable diligence' are new They give effect to the decisions cited in the notes below under the head 'After using all due and reasonable diligence'
- 2 The words 'or carries on business or personally works for gain' have been added to remove a doubt which arose under the old section as to whether it was good service to affix a copy of the summons on the outer door of the defendant's place of business (w)
- 3 The words 'and the name and address' etc., at the end of the rule are also new They merely give effect to the existing practice

Service of summons—The Code prescribes three modes of service of summons upon a defendant They are as follows —

- 1 In the first case, the summons is served by delivering a copy thereof to the defendant personally or to an agent or other person on his behalf and

(v) Queen Empress v. Krishna (1893) 10 Cal 3-5
 (w) Manabappa v. Mainaba (1947) 7 D H C

by obtaining the signature of the person to whom the copy is delivered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons. See rr 10—16 and r 18. O.5.

- 2 In the second case, that is, cases mentioned in r. 17, service is effected without an order of the Court by affixing a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and the Court has to declare after examination of the serving officer that the summons has been duly served : When this mode of service is adopted, the provisions of r 19 have to be complied with and the Court concerned has to decide whether the summons has or has not been duly served. See rr 17 and 19.
- 3 In the third case, that is, cases mentioned in r 20, service is effected after obtaining an order of the Court by affixing a copy of the summons in some conspicuous place in the Court house and also upon some conspicuous part of the house (if any) in which the defendant is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit. Service so effected is as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally. This is called substituted service. See r 20 and the marginal note thereto (x).

Refuses to sign the acknowledgment.—Where a defendant refuses to sign the acknowledgment, the provisions of the present rule must be complied with, namely, that the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door of the defendant's house, otherwise the summons cannot be said to have been duly served (x). In a recent Patna case, the Court expressed the opinion that where a copy of the summons is delivered to the defendant under r 10 above, and the defendant retains it, but refuses to sign an acknowledgment, the provisions of this rule do not apply and that it was not necessary to affix a copy of the summons on the door of the defendant's house, the reason given being that in such a case the serving officer would have no other copy of the summons to be affixed on the outer door, and that the summons must be deemed to be duly served, though no copy was so affixed (y). But it has been held by the same High Court that if the copy of the summons is not retained by the defendant, the provisions of this rule must be strictly complied with (z).

"After using all due and reasonable diligence."—The present rule provides that in cases where the defendant cannot be found, the mode of service prescribed by this rule should not be resorted to until the serving officer has used all due and reasonable diligence to find the defendant, and the defendant could not be found. To justify such service, it must be shown that proper efforts were made to find the defendant, e.g., that the serving officer went to the place or places and at the times at which it was reasonable to expect he would be found (a). Thus, if a serving officer goes to a defendant's house, but does not find him there, and the defendant's adult son, who is in the house, refuses to accept service on behalf of the father, these facts by themselves do not justify the officer in resorting to the mode of service prescribed by this rule; he must, before effecting such service inquire of the son as to where the defendant is and otherwise use due and reasonable diligence in finding the defendant (b). When a defendant is temporarily absent from home, and is not represented in his house by an agent or male member of his family, the summons should be again taken to the defendant's house to be served upon him when the enquiries made show that he is likely to be at home and to be found there (c) Mere temporary absence of the defendant does not justify the serving officer in affixing a copy of the summons on the door of the defendant's house (d) much less, if the serving officer knows where the defendant is though the defendant may not have been in the house at the time when he went to serve the summons (e) See notes above under the head 'The old section.'

Cannot find the defendant—These words are wide enough to cover the case where the serving officer is not able to obtain access to a pardanashin lady who has to be served and cannot deliver or tender a copy of the summons to her (f) See notes to r 18 below, and notes also to O 9 r 13. Grounds on which ex parte decree may be set aside

Proof of service—If the plaintiff appears at the hearing of the suit but the defendant does not appear at the hearing, the question whether the summons was duly served arises directly for the determination of the Court, for the Court cannot proceed ex parte unless it is proved that the summons was duly served [O 9 r 6 (1)] Where a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, and the defendant satisfies the Court which passed the decree that the summons was not duly served upon him, the Court may set aside the decree [O 9 r 13]

18 [S 81] The serving officer shall, in all cases in which the summons has been served under rule 16 endorse or annex, or cause to be endorsed or annexed, on or to the original summons, a return stating the time when and the manner in which the summons was served, and the name and address of the person (if any) identifying the person served and witnessing the delivery or tender of the summons

Endorsement of time and manner of service

Form of return—See Appendix II to Schedule I, Form No 11 The said Form has been altered in certain respects by the Chief Court of the Punjab see Appendix II below

19 [S 82, 1st para] Where a summons is returned under rule 17, the Court shall, if the return under that rule has not been verified by the affidavit of the serving officer, and may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving officer on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching his proceedings, and may make such further inquiry in the matter as it thinks fit, and shall either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thinks fit

"Or order such service as it thinks fit"—These words empower the Court, even when there has been a technical compliance with the provisions of r 17, to order service in another mode, if the Court thinks fit to do so in the interests of justice. Thus where the person to be served is a pardanashin lady, and the serving officer, not being able to obtain access to her, affixes a copy of the summons on the outer door of her dwelling house as provided by r 17, though the mode of service is not improper, the Court may under this rule direct the service of summons by means of notice by registered post, so that the cover may in due course reach the lady herself (g).

20. [S 82, 2nd para, Ss 83, 84.] (1) Where the Court

is satisfied that there is reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service, or that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way, the Court shall order the summons to be served by affixing a copy thereof in some conspicuous place in the Court-house, and also upon some conspicuous part of the house [if any] in which the defendant is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit

(2) Service substituted by order of the Court shall be as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally

(3) Where service is substituted by order of the Court,

Where service substituted time for appearance to be fixed the Court shall fix such time for the appearance of the defendant as the case may require

Substituted service—See notes to r 17 above, "Service of summons"

For any other reason—Where by the custom in India a defendant (being a Hindu woman of rank) could not be personally served with a summons, the Judicial Committee allowed service to be substituted on her Deewan [chief servant] (h)

21. [S 85, 1st para.] A summons may be sent by the Service of summons where defendant resides within jurisdiction of another Court

Court by which it is issued, whether with or without the province, either by one of its officers or by post to any Court (not being the High Court) having jurisdiction in the place where the defendant resides

Service by registered post—This rule is to be read with s. 27 of the General Clauses Act 10 of 1897 by which it is provided that when any document is required by an Act passed after 11th March 1897 to be served by post, and the expression used is "send" [which is the expression used in the present rule], then, "unless a different intention appears [and no such intention appears in the present rule], the service shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, pre-paying and posting by registered post, a letter containing the document, and, unless the contrary is proved, to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post." Reading the present rule with the said s. 27, the High Court of Bombay held in a case in which it appeared that the postal packet enclosing the summons was properly addressed to the defendant, and was registered, duly stamped and posted, but the packet was returned endorsed "refused," that the Court was entitled to draw the inference indicated in the said s. 27 and to hold that there was sufficient service (i). In the earlier cases which arose under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, where a postal packet was returned endorsed "refused," it was held that the service was not sufficient and that further evidence was necessary before the Court could act upon such endorsement (j). As to these cases, however, it is to be noted that they were all decided without any reference to s. 27 of the General Clauses Act as all of them except one were cases, before that Act came into force, and the one decided after that Act came into force was not governed by the provisions of s. 27, as that section did not apply to the Code of 1882 it being an enactment passed before 11th March 1897, the date on which the General Clauses Act came into force.

The High Court of Bombay has recently held that the Court must allow the defendant a retrial if, after a decree has been passed against him on evidence that the summons was served by registered post and returned refused, he appears and denies that the packet had ever been delivered to him by the postal authorities. Macleod, C.J., said "Service by registered post is at any time a poor substitute for personal service which is directed by the Court. It is allowed to litigants as a matter of convenience" (k).

22. [S. 86.] Where a summons issued by any Court established beyond the limits of the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay and Rangoon is to be served within any such limits, it shall be sent to the Court of Small Causes within whose jurisdiction it is to be served.

Additions made to the rule by the High Court of Bombay.—See App IV

23. [S. 85, 2nd para.] The Court to which a summons is sent under rule 21 or rule 22 shall, upon receipt thereof, proceed as if it had been issued by such Court and shall then return the summons to the Court of issue, together with the record (if any) of its proceedings with regard thereto.

Sufficiency of service.—Where a summons has been transmitted by one Court to another for service by the latter, and the return made by the Court serving the summons states that the service has been duly effected, the presumption will be that the service was sufficient unless the return itself shows the insufficiency (l). Similarly when the return made by the Court serving the summons states that the summons has not been duly served, and the summons is returned with that declaration to the Court from which it was issued, the presumption is that the service was not sufficient, and the Court from which the summons was issued should act upon that presumption unless there is good and strong evidence which comes or is brought to its notice going to show that the summons was duly served (m). According to the Calcutta High Court, however, the Court issuing the summons must not proceed upon any presumption either way, but must determine for itself whether the service was sufficient or not, the reason given being that the present rule does not require the Court to which the summons is sent for service to make any return touching the sufficiency of service (n). This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Allahabad on grounds of expediency, and, further, on the ground that it ignores the last sentence of rule IV above which applies not only to the Court issuing the summons, but also to the Court to which it is sent for service (o).

ORDER VI

Pleadings generally

1 [New Cf Jud Act, 1873, S 100]
“Pleading” shall mean plaint or written statement

^{“plaint”}

Introduction of English rules of pleadings—The object of this Order is to introduce into British India the leading rules of pleadings followed in England. The whole of this Order excepting rr 14 and 15 is new. The rules comprised in this Order except rr 14 and 15 have been taken most of them from Order 19 and the rest from Order 24 of the English Rules made under the Judicature Acts. In one respect, however the rigour of the English Rules has been relaxed by providing that the Court may notwithstanding the absence of any specific denial require any fact to be proved by the party who alleges it (see O S r 3)

Function of pleadings—"The whole object of pleadings is to bring the parties to an issue, and the meaning of the rules [relating to pleadings] was to prevent the issue being enlarged, which would prevent either party from knowing, when the cause came on for trial, what the real point to be discussed and decided was. In fact, the whole meaning of the system is to narrow the parties to definite issues, and thereby to diminish expense and delay, especially as regards the amount of testimony required on either side at the hearing" (q). To attain this end, the plaintiff should state in his plaint all the facts which constitute his cause of action. It is not sufficient to allege what may be a ground of action if something else be added which is not stated in the plaint. "Upon all sound principles of pleading it is necessary to allege what must, and not what may, be a cause of action" (r). The defendant also should state in his written statement the material facts on which he relies for his defence. When the result of the pleading on both sides is that a material fact is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other, the question thus raised between the parties is called an issue of fact. When one party answers his opponent's pleading by stating an objection in point of law, the legal question thus raised between the parties is called an issue of law. See O 14, r 1.

A plaintiff's pleading is his plaint (O 7). A defendant's pleading is his written statement (O 8). In some cases a plaintiff who has filed his plaint may, with the leave of the Court, file a written statement, or the Court may require him to file a written statement. In such cases the written statement forms part of the plaintiff's pleadings. Again, there are cases in which a defendant who has filed his written statement may, with the leave of the Court, file an additional written statement or the Court may require him to do so. In such cases the additional written statement forms part of the defendant's pleadings. The plaintiff's written statement and the defendant's additional written statement are called subsequent pleadings. See O 8, r 9.

2 [New. R S C., O. 19, r. 4] Every pleading shall contain,

Pleading to state material facts and not evidence and contain only, a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved, and shall, when necessary, be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively. Dates, sums and numbers shall be expressed in figures

General rules of pleading—O 11 deals with Pleadings in general, O 7 deals with Plaints, and O 8, with Written Statements. The following is a summary of the rules comprised in this Order—

1. State your whole case in your pleading, in other words, set forth in your pleading all material facts on which you rely for your claim or defence (r 2)
- State facts and not law (r 2). If any matter of law is set out in your opponent's pleading, do not plead to it (s)
- State the material facts on which you rely, and not the evidence by which they are to be proved (rr 2, 10, 11, 12)

[1903] 2 K. B. 391, 400

(s) Rushdown v. Mayor of Oxford (1793) 2 H. B. 182

- 4 State material facts only, omit immaterial and unnecessary facts. Do not anticipate your opponent's pleading and plead to any matter which is not alleged against you (r 2)
- 5 State the facts of your case concisely, but with precision (r 2)
- 6 It is not necessary to allege the performance of any condition precedent, an averment of performance is now implied in every pleading (r 6)
- 7 It is not necessary to set out the whole or any part of a document, unless the precise words thereof are necessary. It is sufficient to state the effect of the document as briefly as possible (r 9)
- 8 It is not necessary to allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in your favour, or as to which the burden of proof lies upon your opponent (r 13)

Fundamental rule—Rule 2 of this Order is the fundamental rule of pleadings. When analysed, it will be found to require four things:—

- I Every pleading must state facts and not law
- II It must state material facts, and material facts only
- III It must state only the facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, and not the evidence by which they are to be proved
- IV It must state such facts in a concise form

"The main object, or one of the main objects, of this rule is that the one party may know what are the facts on which the other party relies in order that he may be prepared to meet the case" (i)

I Every pleading must state facts and not law—A pleading must not set forth a public statute, for the Court is bound to take judicial notice of it (u). Nor should parties plead conclusions of law or of mixed law and fact. It is for the Court to declare the law arising upon the facts before it. The parties should only state the facts on which they rely for their claim or defence.

It is bad pleading to allege merely that a right or a duty exists: the facts must be set out which give rise to the right or create the duty. Thus in a suit for damages for negligence, it is not enough for the plaintiff to state that "the defendant has been guilty of negligence" without showing in what respect he was negligent and how he became bound to use care to prevent injury to others. Negligence means a breach of duty to take due care and caution. The plaint, therefore, ought to state facts upon which the supposed duty is founded, and the duty to the plaintiff with the breach of which the defendant is charged (v). Similarly, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to aver that the defendant did the act complained of "wrongfully unlawfully and improperly" or "without any justification therefore or right so to do." He must state the facts upon which he proposes to rely as showing that the act was done wrongfully or unlawfully. "Those epithets, under the present system of pleading are useless and redundant. They add nothing whatever to the plaintiff's case. They are merely now epithets of abuse. They were formerly in declarations essential, because under that form of pleading legal rights were stated for facts, but facts alone are stated now" (w). Upon like principles, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to say "Under and by virtue of a certain deed I am entitled, etc." He must state the facts which go to show his title (x). In like manner, a plain

6, r. 2. tiff claiming under a donatio mortis causa must state the facts which, according to him, would constitute it a valid donatio mortis causa it is not sufficient to say that the deceased "two days before his death made a good and valid donatio mortis causa to the plaintiff" of the property (y) Where a plaintiff claims by inheritance, it is not sufficient to say, "I am the heir at law" He must state the particulars showing the links of relationship on which he relies as constituting him such heir (z)

The same principles apply to a defendant's pleading. A defendant may not in his written statement say merely, "I am not liable" He must allege facts which show that he is not liable. Thus a defendant, who claims privilege in a suit for defamation, must not plead merely that "he published the words on a privileged occasion." He must state the facts which give rise to the privilege (a)

11 Every pleading must state material facts and material facts only.—To begin with, a party should set out in his pleading all material facts on which he relies for his claim or defence. "What particulars are to be stated must depend on the facts of each case. But it is absolutely essential that the pleading not to be embarrassing to the defendants, should state those facts which will put the defendants on their guard and tell them what they have to meet when the case comes on for trial" (b) If a party omits to plead a material fact, he will not be allowed to give evidence of that fact at the trial, unless the Court gives him leave to amend his pleadings under r 17 below. If parties were held strictly to their pleadings under the present system, they ought not to be allowed to prove at the trial, as a fact on which they would have to rely in order to support their case, any fact which is not stated in the pleadings (c) Thus if A sues B for specific performance of a contract, alleged to have been signed by B's agent, and the only fact stated in B's written statement as a ground of defence is that the alleged agent was of unsound mind and therefore incompetent to contract, B will not be allowed to prove at the hearing that the alleged agent had in fact no authority to sign the contract. B ought to have pleaded want of authority in his written statement, if he intended to rely upon it for his defence. Nor will B be allowed to amend his written statement in such a case under rule 17 below, for "if a defendant were to be at liberty to put in a defence inconsistent with the rules of pleading, and then at the trial get his case to stand over in order to put in a new defence, the consequences might be very prejudicial" (d)

Matters affecting damages—The present rule provides that every pleading should contain, and contain only, material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be. That is to say, a plaintiff should contain only those material facts on which the plaintiff relies for his claim and a written statement should contain only those material facts on which the defendant relies for his defence. Does this mean that the plaintiff should be confined to those facts only which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action, and that the written statement should be confined to those facts only which constitute the defendant's defence? It has been held, as regards a plaintiff's claim, that the words "material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim," are not confined to those facts which are essential to the plaintiff's cause of action, but include any fact which the plaintiff is entitled to prove at the hearing. Thus facts which merely tend to increase the amount of damages are not essential to the cause of action, but they certainly are facts which the plaintiff is entitled to prove at the hearing as matters in aggravation of damages. Such facts are therefore "material" facts within the meaning of this rule and a plaintiff has to state them in his plaint (e). As observed by Brett, L.J., in Phillipps v Phillipps (f), the words of the rule are not "the facts which will be necessary to support the cause of action" they are, "the material facts on which the party relies for his claim." In Millington v Loring (g), which was a suit for damages for breach of a contract to marry, the plaintiff, after alleging the promise to marry in the first paragraph and the breach thereof in the second, went on to allege in the third paragraph that "the plaintiff relying upon the said promise permitted the defendant to debauch and carnally know her, whereby the defendant infected her with a venereal disease." Analysing the above plaint, it may be stated that the first and second paragraphs stated facts that were essential to the cause of action, i.e., facts relating to the making of the contract and facts relating to the breach of the contract, being facts which constitute the cause of action in a suit for damages for the breach of a contract. But the facts stated in the third paragraph were not essential to the cause of action. Nevertheless they were material facts within the meaning of the rule, for the plaintiff was entitled to prove them as matters in aggravation of damages, and it was held that they were properly set forth in the plaint. Turning now to the defence in a suit for damages, the rule laid down in Wood v Durham (h) is, that a defendant is not in general entitled to plead in his defence matters in mitigation of damages. The ground of the decision in that case is that such matters do not constitute any defence to an action, and a defendant can under the rule allege only those material facts on which he relies for his defence. As to Millington v Loring, it was said that it was a case where "there was a good cause of action of a double character stated there were damages claimed by reason of an alleged breach of promise of marriage, but there was far more, because part of the cause of action was that by reason of that the plaintiff had been ill through the seduction by the defendant, who had ruined her character and had infected her with a bad disease." One may be permitted to doubt whether illness through seduction and infection with disease formed part of the cause of action. Moreover, the decision in Millington v Loring has been followed in a case later than Wood v Durham, where it could not be said that there was a cause of action of a double character (i). However this may be, it is to be remarked that the decision in Wood v Durham turned not only on the construction of the corresponding English rule, but on O 21, r 4, which provides in express terms that no denial or defence shall be necessary as to damages claimed or their amount, but they shall be deemed to be put in issue in all cases unless expressly admitted. O 21, r 4 of the English rules has not been reproduced in the Code. Such being the case just as the plaintiff may plead any matter in aggravation of damages as to which he could give evidence at the trial, so the defendant may plead any matter in mitigation of damages as to which he could give evidence at the trial. See notes to O 8, r 3, "Except damages."

Facts not yet material to a case.—The pleadings should only contain such facts as are material at the present stage of the suit. It is not proper to anticipate the answer of the adversary. To do so is like leaping before one comes to the stile (j). "It is no part of the statement of claim ['plaint' in our pleadings] to anticipate the defence, and to state what the plaintiff would have to say in answer to it. That would be a return to the old inconvenient system of pleading in Chancery which ought certainly not to be encouraged, when the plaintiff used to allege in his bill imaginary defences of the defendant, 6, r. 2. and make charges in reply to them" (l). Thus it is unnecessary in a suit upon a bond to allege that the defendant was of full age when he executed the bond. For if he were a minor when he executed the bond, it is for him to prove it: it need not be denied by anticipation (l). Similarly a defendant should not plead to any matter which is not alleged against him. Thus if a defendant is sued for slander, the only way to meet the plaintiff's claim is to plead (1) that the words in question were not spoken and published, or (2) that they were spoken and published and are true, or (3) that they were spoken and published and are privileged. If, instead of so doing, he pleads that he did not say the words alleged in the plaint, but that he said something else, and that the something else which he said was true and spoken on a privileged occasion, the defence will be struck out under r. 16 below as one embarrassing the fair trial of the suit (m).

III Every pleading must state facts, and not the evidence by which they are to be proved—Every pleading must contain a statement of the material facts on which the party pleading relies but not the evidence by which those facts are to be proved. "It is an elementary rule of pleading that, when a state of facts is relied on, it is enough to allege it simply without setting out the subordinate facts which are the means of producing it, or the evidence sustaining the allegation" (n). No doubt, evidence too consists of facts, but there is a convenient nomenclature to distinguish the two. The material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence are called facta probanda. The evidence or the facts by means of which they are to be proved are called facta probantia. Every pleading should contain only facta probanda, and not facta probantia. The distinction is taken in the very rule itself, between the facts on which the party relies and the evidence to prove those facts. Erle, C.J., expressed it in this way. He said there were facts that might be called the allegata probanda, the facts which ought to be proved, and they were different from the evidence which was adduced to prove those facts. And it was upon that expression of opinion of Erle, C.J., that rule 4 [of the English rules, corresponding to the present rule] was drawn. The facts which ought to be stated are the material facts on which the party pleading relies (o). Thus where a suit is brought against an Insurance Company on a policy on the life of A, and one of the conditions of the policy is that it should be void if the insured committed suicide, the Company should only plead, if the defence is that A committed suicide, that A died by his own hand. It is wrong to state in the written statement that A had been melancholy for weeks, that he bought a pistol and shot himself with it. These facts are merely evidence (facta probantia) facts by means of which the factum probandum, namely, suicide, is to be proved (p). Similarly, it is wrong to set out in the pleading admissions made by the opponent, for admissions are only evidence (q). Thus where a plaintiff alleged that certain windows of his were ancient, and the defendant stated in his defence that the plaintiff had in a former action admitted that they were not ancient, the allegation was struck out (r). Upon the same principle, "where the facts in a pedigree are facts to be relied upon as facts to establish the right or title, they must be set out, but where the pedigree is the means of proving the facts relied on as facts by which the right or title is to be established, then the pedigree is evidence that need not be set out" (s).

IV Every pleading must state material facts in a concise form—To attain this end, the forms in Appendix A when applicable, and where they are not applicable, forms of the like character, as nearly as may be, should be used for all pleadings (see r 3 below) At the same time the rules given above under the head "General rules of pleading," p 436 above, should be borne in mind But the pleader should not sacrifice precision to conciseness For, as observed by Kay, J, "although pleadings must now be concise, they must also be precise" (i) In fact, rule 4 expressly requires that in all cases "in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms [in Appendix A] particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleadings" As to further information on this subject of "certainty" in pleadings, see notes to rr 4 5 below

Alternative and inconsistent allegations—The rule now under consideration does not prohibit inconsistent pleadings "A person may rely upon one set of facts, if he can succeed in proving them, and he may rely upon another set of facts if he can succeed in proving them, and it appears to me to be far too strict a construction of this Order to say that he must make up his mind on which particular line he will put his case, when perhaps he is very much in the dark" (u) The rules as to joinder of defendants (O 1, r 3) and causes of action (O 2, r 3) and also the rules as to the reliefs that may be claimed by a plaintiff (O 7, rr 7 8) clearly show that either party may allege in his pleadings two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claim relief thereunder in the alternative (v) A plaintiff may rely 'upon several different rights alternatively, although they may be inconsistent' (w) But then "as to each of those he ought to set out the facts upon which he would have to rely as facts to maintain that right" (x) So, too a defendant may, by his written statement raise as many distinct and separate, and therefore inconsistent, defences as he may think proper (y) But this is subject to the provision contained in rule 16 below which provides that the Court may strike out any matter in a plaint or written statement which may embarrass the fair trial of the suit (z) A pleading however, is not embarrassing within the meaning of rule 16, merely because it sets up inconsistent sets of facts (a) Hence it cannot be struck out solely on that ground 'To go to the length of saying that no inconsistent pleading can be pleaded, appears to me not warranted by the rules and contrary to the established practice of the Courts' (b) It must, however, be noted that "if alternative cases are alleged the facts ought not to be mixed up, leaving the [other party] to pick out the facts applicable to each case but facts ought to be distinctly stated so as to show on what facts each alternative of the relief sought is founded" (c) [See O 7, r 8] If the facts are so mixed up that they may embarrass the fair trial of the suit, the Court may strike out matters which may embarrass the trial What the rules prohibit are not inconsistent pleadings but pleadings which set up inconsistent and embarrassing claims and inconsistent and embarrassing defences. Rule 10, 11 and 12 of this Order are special applications of the general principle laid down in this rule

IV Every pleading must state material facts in a concise form—To attain this end the forms in Appendix A when applicable and where they are not applicable forms of the like character as nearly as may be should be used for all pleadings (see r II below). At the same time the rules given above under the head 'General rules of pleading' p 436 above should be borne in mind. But the pleader should not sacrifice precision to conciseness. For as observed by Kay, J. although pleadings must now be concise they must also be precise. (1) In fact rule 4 expressly requires that in all cases, in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms [in Appendix A] particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleadings. As to further information on this subject of 'certainty in pleadings' see notes to rr 4 & below.

Alternative and inconsistent allegations—The rule now under consideration does not prohibit inconsistent pleadings. A person may rely upon one set of facts if he can succeed in proving them and he may rely upon another set of facts if he can succeed in proving them and it appears to me to be far too strict a construction of this Order to say that he must make up his mind on which particular line he will put his case when perhaps he is very much in the dark. (u) The rules as to joinder of defendants (O 1 r 3) and causes of action (O 2 r 3) as also the rules as to the reliefs that may be claimed by a plaintiff (O 7 rr 7 & 8) clearly show that either party may allege in his pleadings two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claim relief thereunder in the alternative. (v) A plaintiff may rely upon several different rights alternatively although they may be inconsistent. (u) But then as to each of those he ought to set out the facts upon which he would have to rely as facts to maintain that right. (z) So too a defendant may by his written statement raise as many distinct and separate and therefore inconsistent defences as he may think proper. (y) But this is subject to the provision contained in rule 16 below which provides that the Court may strike out any matter in a plaint or written statement which may embarrass the fair trial of the suit. (v) A pleading however is not embarrassing within the meaning of rule 16 merely because it sets up inconsistent sets of facts. (a) Hence it cannot be struck out solely on that ground. To go to the length of saying that no inconsistent pleading can be pleaded appears to me not warranted by the rules and contrary to the established practice of the Courts. (b) It must however, be noted that if alternative cases are alleged the facts ought not to be mixed up leaving the [other party] to pick out the facts applicable to each case but facts ought to be distinctly stated so as to show on what facts each alternative of the relief sought is founded. (c) [See O 7 r 8]. If the facts are so mixed up that they may embarrass the fair trial of the suit the Court may strike out matters which may embarrass the trial. What the rules prohibit are not inconsistent pleadings but pleadings which set up inconsistent and embarrassing claims and inconsistent and embarrassing defences. A plea that a policy of fire insurance was not in existence at the time of the fire and that there was no contract of insurance at all, coupled with an alternative plea that, if there was a contract, then by reason of certain conditions precedent to the attaching of the liability, the insurance company would not be liable, is not contrary to the law of India (d).

3. [New. R. S. C., O 19 r. 5] The forms in Appendix A when applicable, and where they are not applicable forms of the like character, as nearly as may be, shall be used for all pleadings.

Forms of pleading

4 [New. R S C., O 19, r. 6] In all cases in which the party pleading relies on any misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default, or undue influence, and in all other cases in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms aforesaid, particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleading.

Particulars to be given where necessary

Object of particulars.—"Although pleadings must now be concise, they must also be precise" (e) For this purpose all necessary particulars must be embodied in the pleadings. If the particulars stated in the pleadings are not sufficiently specific, the other party may apply for further and better particulars under the next rule. The object of particulars is to prevent surprise at the trial by informing the opposite party what case he has to meet, to define and narrow the issues to be tried and so save unnecessary expense (f) Particulars supplement pleadings which would otherwise be too vague and general and ensure a fair trial by giving notice of the case intended to be set up (g) "What particulars are to be stated must depend upon the facts of each case" (h) As a general rule it may be stated that "as much certainty and particularity must be insisted on as is reasonable having regard to the circumstances and to the nature of the acts themselves. To insist upon less would be to relax old and intelligible principles. To insist upon more would be the vainest pedantry" (i) At the same time the distinction between particulars and evidence must be steadily kept in view. "The Courts have uniformly endeavoured to prevent the plaintiff, or the defendant, as the case may be from prying into the brief of his opponent for finding out what is to be the evidence which is to be produced at the trial. On the other hand, the Courts have uniformly said that the plaintiff or the defendant is entitled to be told any and every particular which will enable him properly to prepare his case for the trial, so that he may not be taken by surprise" (j) That is to say, whilst particulars may be ordered to prevent surprise, and to inform the opposite party of the case he has to meet, particulars are not ordered of the mode in which it may be proposed to prove the case set up in the pleading (k) To use the phraseology of r 2 above particulars will be ordered of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence but not of the et cetera by which those facts are to be proved. Thus a defendant is not entitled to know the names of the plaintiff's witnesses for that is to require particulars of the evidence by which the plaintiff's case is to be proved. But where the names of witnesses form part of the material facts constituting a party's case he is bound to state them in his pleading and if he does not an order may be made requiring him to disclose the names (d). If the particulars are those that he ought to give he cannot refuse to do so merely on the ground that his answer will disclose the names of the witnesses he proposes to call (e). This may be explained by an illustration. A deals in drugs bearing the registered trade mark Herbalm. B uses the word Herbalm on drugs manufactured by him. A sues B for infringement of his trade mark alleging in the plaint that the use of his trade mark by B is calculated to induce and had in fact induced diverse persons to purchase B's goods as and for A's goods. B applies for particulars of the names and addresses of the diverse persons. B is entitled to the particulars for the names in this case form part of the material facts which constitute A's case. The whole question in such a case is has the defendant induced diverse persons to buy his goods as and for those of the plaintiff (n).

Fraud and coercion—Where fraud is charged against the defendant it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. It is not enough to use such general words as fraud, deceit or machinations. General allegations however strong may be the words in which they are stated are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice (o). Where a plaintiff seeks relief on the ground of fraud but the particulars of the fraud alleged are not set forth in the plaint the plaint should be ordered to be amended or rejected (p) [see O 11 r 1* and O 7 r 11]. A charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid and when one kind of fraud is charged another kind of fraud cannot upon failure of proof be substituted for it (q). Nor is it proper for the appellate Court to entertain a case of fraud other than the one specifically alleged in the pleadings (r). The same rules apply when coercion is charged in the plaint (s).

If the particulars of fraud stated in the plaint are not sufficiently specific the defendant may apply for further particulars under the next rule. Thus where it is alleged by the plaintiffs that the defendants have made false entries in the plaintiff's books for the purpose of defrauding them the plaintiffs may be directed to furnish particulars specifying the entries charged to be false and the nature of their objection to each item (t). See notes to rule 5 below. Discovery before particulars. All (1) and notes to O 6 r 1* Amendment by adding plea of fraud.

"Misrepresentation"—Where it is alleged in the plaint that the defendant represented to the plaintiff etc. it should be stated whether the representation was verbal or in writing (r). It is not enough in an action to restrain infringement of a

6, r. 4. trade mark to allege that "diverse persons" were induced by the acts of the defendant to purchase his goods as and for those of the plaintiff. The plaintiff should state in the plaint particulars of the names and addresses of those "diverse persons" (1)

Breach of trust—Where breach of trust is charged, the pleading must specify the acts constituting the alleged breach of trust. It is not enough to say that the defendant had "in various ways misappropriated rent and profits of leaseholds, which he had received on behalf of the plaintiff, and had committed breaches of trust" (u)

"Other cases in which particulars may be necessary :—"

Misconduct—Where the dismissal of a servant or an agent is justified on the ground of misconduct, the party so justifying must specify the acts of misconduct (x)

Negligence—Where negligence or contributory negligence is charged, full details must be given of the acts on which the party pleading relies as constituting negligence (y)

Agreement—Where an agreement is alleged, the pleading should state the date of the agreement, the names of the parties to it, and whether it was in writing or verbal (z). If it is an implied agreement, it should appear from what facts or circumstances it is to be implied (see r. 12 below)

Defamation—In an action for slander, the plaintiff must give particulars of the names of the persons to whom the alleged slander was made (a)

In an action for libel, where the charge made against the plaintiff in the alleged libel is general in its nature, a defendant who pleads a justification must state in his pleading the facts on which he relies in support of his justification (b). But where in an action of libel the defendant relies on the defence of fair comment and pleads it in the form now commonly known as the "rolled up plea—i.e.," In so far as the said words consist of allegations of fact the said words are in their nature and ordinary meaning true in substance and in fact, and in so far as the said words consist of expression of opinion they are fair comment made in good faith and without malice for the benefit of the public upon the said facts which are a matter of public interest," the Court will not order the defendant to specify which of the words complained of he relies on as being statements of facts, and which as being expressions of opinion. Nor will the Court order him to give particulars of the facts on which he relies as being the basis of his comments, if the plea (as above) limits those facts to "the said facts" for the plaintiff is thereby given all the information on the subject that he can require (c). A sends a book of which he is the author to B for a review. B, in reviewing the book, prints and publishes, among other statements, the following: "A is, by his own confession, a most barefaced liar." A sues B for damages for libel. B justifies, pleading the truth of the alleged libel. B must specify in his pleading the passage in A's work on which he relies in support of the defence of justification (d).

Accounts—Where a plaintiff claims merely to have a general account taken he need not give particulars as to the items. But it is otherwise if the plaintiff claims a definite amount instead of an account. In the latter case the plaintiff must give particulars as to the items of which it is composed (e).

Particulars of defence—The general principles upon which the Courts act in requiring particulars to be given of allegations or matters stated in plaints are applicable equally to defences, and the rules relating to the giving of particulars are in general applicable to all pleadings, though from the nature of the case the occasion for particulars arises somewhat less frequently in regard to defences than in regard to claims. Thus where a defence consists of traverses or denials of allegations in the claim so that the defendant is not taking upon himself the onus of proving any substantive facts, but is only denying or requiring proof of those alleged by the plaintiff, the occasion for particulars does not arise, but where he pleads affirmatively or sets up facts to be proved in answer to the plaintiff's case, he may be, and in general is, as much under obligation to give particulars as if he were alleging such or similar matters in a plaint (h). For instance, if a defendant sets up a defence of payments made, he has to give particulars of the dates and amounts of such payments. So if he justifies a libel, he must state the facts fully in his pleadings or give particulars (i). Similarly where he alleges that he is released from or exonerated and discharged from, the performance of his contract, he must in his written statement give sufficient information to his opponent as to how and when he was so released or discharged [Bullen and Leake, Precedents of Pleadings, 8th ed., 532, 533]. But where the onus of establishing a positive or negative allegation lies on the plaintiff, the Court will not order the defendant to give particulars of his traverse of that allegation. Thus where the plaintiff alleged that the committee of the Stock Exchange in declining to re-elect him as a member of the Exchange did not act bona fide, fairly, reasonably, or judicially in coming to the conclusion they did, and the committee in their defence alleged that they acted bona fide and honestly, it was held that the onus of proving that the committee had not acted bona fide being on the plaintiff, he was not entitled to particulars of the facts or grounds upon which the committee based their decision (j).

5 [New. R S C, O 19, r 7] A further and better statement of the nature of the claim or defence, or further and better particulars of any matter stated in any pleading may in all cases be ordered, upon such terms, as to cost and otherwise, as may be just.

6, r. 5. r 4, the other party may apply under this rule for further and better particulars. If the English practice is to be followed here the application need not be supported by any affidavit except, perhaps in a special case (m)

When application should be made—As a general rule a defendant who claims particulars should apply for them with reasonable promptitude (n) and before putting in his defence but he does not by putting in his defence waive his right to particulars (o) Nay, in a proper case the Court may order an application for particulars to stand over till a written statement has been put in to enable the Court to know what the points raised by the defence are as where the defendant is the plaintiff's agent and the particulars in question are all in the knowledge of the defendant but not in the knowledge of the plaintiff (p)

Discovery before particulars—The question often arises where a defendant has applied for particulars whether the plaintiff should deliver particulars before obtaining discovery and inspection of the defendant's books or whether discovery should be given before particulars are delivered There is no hard and fast rule as to the class of cases in which particulars should precede discovery or discovery be ordered before particulars but the Judge must exercise a reasonable discretion in every case after carefully looking at all the facts and taking into account any special circumstances (q) The result of the authorities appears to be that where the party pleading does not know the facts necessary to enable him to give the particulars but his opponent knows them, the party applying for particulars may be ordered to give discovery before the party pleading is required to deliver particulars and the application for particulars may be postponed till after discovery It is good practice and good sense that where the defendant knows the facts and the plaintiffs do not the defendant should give discovery before the plaintiffs deliver particulars (r)

1 Suit by principal against agent for accounts charging agent with fraud—A employs B to purchase goods as his agent at the lowest possible price A sues B for an account alleging in the plaint that B had purchased goods at prices higher than the current prices and had secretly received commission from the vendors The charges against B are stated in general terms no particulars being given A is unable to state the particulars of the fraud charged until he sees B's books A is entitled to inspection of B's books before he can be called upon to deliver particulars of the fraud (s)

2 Suit by wife & executor against husband—A who is the executor of J, sues B, J's husband to recover from him all the furniture and other chattels purchased by J with her separate income and included in an inventory of all the goods in B's house made sometime before J's death B applies for particulars of the furniture He is not entitled to the particulars until he declares by an affidavit which of the articles comprised in the inventory belonged to his wife Where the plaintiffs are executors who do not know, and the defendant a person who does know it is right that discovery should come first (t)

3 Suit by a colliery company against a colliery merchant—A colliery company sues R, a coal merchant, for damages for fraudulently passing off coal not gotten from the company's mines as coal gotten from the company's mines. The plaintiffs in their plaint give one specific instance of fraud, and allege that "on divers other occasions" the defendant had taken orders from "divers other persons" for coal to be supplied from the company's mines, and fraudulently sold coal not purchased from the plaintiff as coal gotten from the company's mines. R applies for particulars of the names and dates. The company then applies for inspection of R's books. The company is entitled to discovery before delivering particulars. Chitty, J., said: "Having regard to the circumstances that many of these alleged frauds are within the defendant's means of knowledge and are not within the knowledge of the plaintiffs, I think discovery ought to precede particulars" (u).

The practice followed in the above cases was sought to be applied in a libel case where A sued B for calling him a "charity swindler" and "imposter," and B pleaded justification, and, when called upon to give particulars of the charge, said that he could not unless he was allowed inspection of A's books of account. The Court held that B was not entitled to discovery before he had delivered particulars. Kay, L.J., said: "To apply this practice to the case of a libel would be to sanction the publication of a libel when the libeller knew no facts justifying the libellous statement, because he believed he could, by the process of discovery, elicit such facts" (v).

Further particulars granted—For cases in which further and better particulars have been ordered, see notes to r 4, "Other cases in which particulars may be necessary," on p 444 above.

Objections to particulars:—

- 1 A applies for particulars from B under this rule. It is a valid objection to the application that the particulars applied for by 4 relate to the mode in which B's case is to be proved, and not to material facts constituting B's case. See notes to r 4, 'Object of particulars, p 442 above.
- 2 Particulars will only be ordered of material facts constituting a party's case, but not of any immaterial allegation (w).
- 3 Particulars will only be ordered of material facts alleged by a party in his pleading, but not of those denied by him. See notes to r 4, "Particulars of defence," p 445 above.
- 4 A applies for particulars from B under this rule. It is no objection to the application that A must know the true facts of the case better than B (x).
- 5 Where a party from whom particulars are sought is unable to give the particulars without laborious inquiry, the practice is to make an order for "the best particulars the party can give" (y). This is usually the case where the party fills a representative character (z).

"Upon such terms as to costs or otherwise"—Thus an order may be made directing that unless particulars are delivered within a certain time, the suit shall be dismissed (a).

O. 6, r. 5, 6. Amending or delivering further particulars—Where a party who has delivered particulars under an order afterwards desires to amend them or to deliver further particulars, the proper course for him is to obtain an order giving him leave to do so (b). And leave, will, in general, be granted, where the amendment will cause no injury to the opposite party except such as can be sufficiently compensated for by costs (c). Leave to amend may be refused where it is sought to introduce a new cause of action (d), or to add to the amount claimed after the defendant has paid into Court the full amount originally claimed (e). An application to amend particulars will, as a rule, be refused if made at the trial of the suit (f). See s 153 and r 17 of this Order.

6 [New. R. S. C., O. 19. r. 14.] Any condition precedent, the performance or occurrence of which is intended to be contested, shall be distinctly specified in his pleading by the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be; and, subject thereto, an averment of the performance or occurrence of all conditions precedent necessary for the case of the plaintiff or defendant shall be implied in his pleading.

Neither party need allege the performance of any condition precedent.—A agrees to build a house for B at certain rates specified in the contract. It is a condition of the agreement that payment to A should only be made upon a certificate signed by B's architect that so much is due. A demands payment upon completion of the building, but B refuses to pay. A sues B claiming Rs 5,000. Here the obtaining of the architect's certificate is a condition precedent to A's right of action. The present rule provides that it is not necessary for A expressly to aver in his plaint that he has obtained the architect's certificate. Such averment, the rule says shall be implied in his pleading. The rule further provides that if B intends to contest the fulfilment of the condition precedent, he must distinctly specify the condition precedent in his written statement. He must plead that the architect has not certified the amount claimed in the suit. If B does not plead the non performance of the condition, it will be presumed that the condition has been duly performed. If B pleads non performance, the burden of proving due performance will be on A.

A condition precedent, it must be observed, does not strictly speaking form part of the cause of action. Thus in the case put above A's cause of action consists of the making of the contract and of the breach thereof by B. The condition of obtaining the architect's certificate is but an additional formality introduced by the express agreement of the parties, suspending A's right to sue until the condition has been performed.

History of the rule—This rule is a reproduction of O 10, r 14, of the English Rules. Before the rule was made, it was necessary for the plaintiff to aver that the condition should be performed, and to prove it. The rule was made to alter the earlier practice by enabling the plaintiff to aver performance of conditions precedent generally. For this purpose, the form in use was, "all conditions were performed, and all things happened, and all times elapsed necessary to entitle the plaintiff to have the said promise performed by the defendant, and to maintain his action for the breach thereof hereinafter alleged'. The present rule does away with the necessity of even a general averment of performance of condition precedent. A plaintiff need not now allege the performance of any condition precedent. It is for the defendant to object if he intends to dispute the performance of any condition precedent.

"Distinctly"—This rule requires that where a party intends to contest the performance of any condition precedent, he must distinctly specify the condition precedent in his pleading. An allegation in general terms that there was "an express condition" is not enough. The pleading must state the terms of the condition, the names of the parties to it, and whether it was in writing or verbal (g).

7. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 16.] No pleading shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same.

Departure

Departure in pleading—This rule provides against what is called "a departure in pleading". It is a reproduction of O 19, r 16 of the English Rules. Its importance in this country is not likely to be so great as in England where the practice is for each party in turn to state his own case, and answer that of his opponent before the hearing. Not that the Code does not recognize subsequent pleadings (see O 11 r 9), but such pleadings are seldom resorted to in this country even in the Presidency towns. The general principles on which the system of pleading in England is founded are as follows—

- 1 The plaintiff by his statement of claim alleges the material facts on which he relies in support of his case.
- 2 The defendant, in answer thereto, delivers a defence in which he may take all or any of the following courses—first, he may deny or refuse to admit the facts stated by the plaintiff secondly, he may confess or admit them and avoid their effect by answering fresh facts which afford an answer thereto, thirdly he may admit the facts stated by the plaintiff, and may raise a question of law as to their legal effect.
 If the defendant adopts the first or third of these three courses a question of fact or of law is at once raised between the parties.
- 3 If the defendant adopts the second of the three courses, the plaintiff may reply—first by denying the fresh facts alleged by the defendant or secondly by admitting them and alleging other facts which avoid their effect, or thirdly by raising a question of law as to their effect.
- 4 If the plaintiff pleads a reply of the second kind that is, if he replies by way of confession and avoidance the defendant has the same courses open to him in pleading a rejoinder (h). A rejoinder is now seldom pleaded.
- 5 It is very seldom that further proceedings are taken but there may be sur-rejoinder & rebutters and surrebutters.

Under the Code, a plaintiff commences his suit by presenting a plaint. The defendant then puts in his written statement in answer to the plaintiff's claim. There is nothing corresponding to a Reply or Rejoinder in the Anglo Indian system of pleadings. But the plaintiff may, with the leave of the Court, tender a written statement, and the defendant may, with like leave, tender an additional written statement (O 8, r 9). The Code of 1882 also contained a similar provision (i), but pleadings in this country seldom go beyond the defendant's written statement.

The word 'pleading' at the commencement of this rule refers to subsequent pleadings. Thus in England a plaintiff may not raise in his Reply a ground of claim different from that raised in his Statement of Claim, nor can he in his Reply set up facts inconsistent with those set up in his Statement of Claim. A reply is not the proper place in which to raise new claims. A plaintiff who wishes to add new claims can do so only by amending the Statement of Claim. Similar remarks apply to a defendant's Rejoinder. As a plaintiff's Reply must be consistent with his Statement of Claim, so a defendant's Rejoinder must be consistent with his Defence. Thus if a plaintiff alleges merely a negligent breach of trust in his Statement of Claim, the Reply must not assert that the breach of trust was fraudulent (j). Similarly, if the Defence alleges that the arbitrators did not make any award, the Rejoinder must not assert that the award was not tendered by the proper time "for it is one thing not to make an award and another thing not to tender it when made." (k). Upon the same principle, a plaintiff who claims rent on the basis of a lease cannot claim the same sum in his Reply as damages for unlawfully holding over, for by his Statement of Claim he treats the defendant as his tenant, and he cannot turn round in his Reply and say "If the defendant is not liable as a tenant, he is liable as a trespasser." (l).

8 [New R. S. C., O 19, r 20] Where a contract is alleged in any pleading, a bare denial of the same by the opposite party shall be construed only as a denial in fact of the express contract alleged or of the matters of fact from which the same may be implied, and not as a denial of the legality or sufficiency in law of such contract.

Denial of contract—All matters which go to show that the contract sued on is void or unlawful must be specifically pleaded. If such matters are not expressly pleaded, no evidence thereof can, as a rule, be given at the trial. Thus if A sues B on a contract, and B in his written statement merely denies the contract, such denial will be taken to mean only that there was in fact no such contract as alleged; it will not be construed as a denial of the legality of the contract. The result is that if A proves the contract sued upon, B will not be allowed to contend at the hearing that the contract was a wagering contract, and therefore void. B ought to have specifically pleaded in his written statement that the contract was a wagering contract (m). But where at the hearing of a suit the plaintiff's case discloses that the transaction which is the basis of his claim is illegal, the Court cannot properly ignore the illegality, even if the illegality be not pleaded.

It matters not whether the defendant has pleaded the illegality or whether he has not. If the evidence adduced by the plaintiff proves the illegality, the Court ought not to assist him' (o) Note that an agreement by way of wager is void, but not illegal [see Indian Contract Act, 1872, ss 23 and 30] See O 8, r 2

9. [New. RSC, O 19, r 21] Wherever the contents of any document are material, it shall be sufficient in any pleading to state the effect thereof as briefly as possible, without setting out the whole or any part thereof, unless the precise words of the document or any part thereof are material

Effect of document to be stated

Effect of document to be stated—This rule provides what is to be the proper method of pleading where a material fact (r 2) is evidenced by a document (p) The intention expressed by the first part of the rule seems clearly to be that, where a document is material it shall not be necessary to set it out at length, but only to state the legal effect of it the object apparently being to prevent long pleadings (q) Thus it is sufficient if a plaintiff in a suit for the recovery of immovable property under a will states in his plaint the effect of the will under which he claims He is not bound to set out the precise words of the will, although a question has arisen as to the true construction of those words (r) At the same time, it is not enough for a plaintiff to say that under and by virtue of a certain deed he is entitled to the property claimed by him He must state the effect of the document on which he relies (s)

Precise words.—In an action of libel or slander it is always necessary to set out the exact words alleged to be libellous (t)

10 [New. RSC, O. 19, r 22] Wherever it is material to allege malice, fraudulent intention knowledge or other condition of the mind of any person, it shall be sufficient to allege the same as a fact without setting out the circumstances from which the same is to be inferred
